S the Winter had been very unprosperous, and unfuccessful to the King, in the diminution and loss of those Forces, upon which he chiefly depended to fultain the power of the Enemy the year ensuing; so the Spring enter'd with no better prefage. When both Armies had enterdinto their Winter Quarters, to refresh themselves after so much fatigue, the great preparation that was made at London, and the fame of sending S. William Waller into the West, put the King upon the resolution of having such a Body in his way, as might give him interruption, without Prince Maurice's being difturb'd in his Siege of Plymouth; which was not thought to be able to make long reliftance. To this purpose the Lord Hopson was appointed to Command an Army apart, to be leuied out of the Garrison of Briftol, and those Western Counties adjacent newly reduced; where his Reputation and Interest was very great; and by it he had in a short time raifed Vol. II. Part 2.

raised a pretty Body of Foot and Horse; to which receiving an Addition of two very good Regiments (though not many in Number) out of Munster, under the Command of St Charles Vavasour, and Sr John Pawlet, and a good Troop of Horse under the Command of Captain Bridges, all which had been transported, according to former Orders, out of Ireland to Briffel, fince the Cessation, that Lord advanced to Salisbury, and shortly after to Winchester; whither Sr John Berkley brought him two Regiments more of Foot, raifed by him in Devon-shire; so that he had in all, at least, three thousand Foot, and about fifteen hundred Horse; which, in so good a Post as Winchester was, would in a short time have grown to a confiderable Army; and was at prefent strong enough to have stopped, or attended Waller in his Western Expedition; nor did He expect to have found fuch an obstruction in his way. And therefore, when he was upon his March, and was inform'd of the Lord Hopton's being at Winchester with fuch a strength, he retired to Farnham; and Quarter'd there till he gave his Masters an Account that he wanted other Supplies.

IT was a general misfortune, and miscomputation of that time, that the Party, in all places, that wish'd well to the King (which confifted of most of the Gentry in most Counties, and for the present were aw'd, and kept under by the Militia, and the Committees of Parliament) had so good an opinion of their own Reputation and Interest, that they believ'd they were able, upon the Affiftance of few Troops, to fuppress their Neighbours who were of the other Party, and who, upon the advantage of the power they were posses'd of, exercised their Authority over them with great rigour, and infolence. And to the Lord Hopton was no sponer possessed of Winchester, where Sr William Ogle had likewise seised upon the Castle for the King, and put it into a tenable condition, than the Gentlemen of Suffex, and of the adjacent parts of Hampfhire, fent privately to him, "that if he would advance "into Their Country, they would undertake, in a short time, "to make great Levies of Men for the recruit of his Army; "and likewife to possess themselves of such places as they "Thould be well able to defend; and thereby keep that part " of the Country in the King's Obedience.

Sr Edward Ford, a Gentleman of a good Family, and fair Fortune in Suffex, had then a Regiment of Horse in the Lord Hopton's Troops, and the King had made him High Sheriff of Suffex that year, to the end that, if there were ocrealion, he might the better make impression upon that County. He had with him, in his Regiment, many of the Gentlemen of that County of good Quality: And they all befought

the Lord Hopton, " that he would, fince Waller was not like co to advance, at least fend some Troops into those parts, to egive a little Countenance to the Levies they should be well "able to make; affuring him, " that they would, in the first place, seife upon Arundle-Castle; which, standing near the "Sea, would yield great advantage to the King's Service, " and keep that rich Corner of the Country at his Majelty's "Devotion. These, and many other specious undertakings, disposed the Lord Hopton, who had an extraordinary appetite to engage Waller in a Battle, upon old accounts, to with himfelf at Liberty to comply with those Gentlemen's desires: of all which, he gave such an Account to the King, as made it appear, that he liked the delign, and thought it practicable, if he had an addition of a Regiment or two of Foot, under good Officers; for that Quarter of Suffex, which he meant to visit, was a fast and inclosed Country, and Arundle-Castle had a Garrison in it, though not numerous, or well provided, as being without apprehension of an Enemy. IT was about Christmas, and the King had no farther defign for the Winter, than to keep Waller from viliting and disturbing the West, and to recruit his Army to such a degree as to be able to take the Field early; which he knew the Rebels result'd to do ; yet the good Post the Lord Hopton was already possessed of at Winchester, and these positive undertakings from Suffex, wrought upon many to think, that this opportunity should not be loft. The King had likewife great Affurance of the general good Affections of the County of Kent; infomuch as the People had with difficulty been reftrain'd from making some attempt, upon the confidence of their own strength; and if there could be now such a foundation laid, that there might be a conjunction between that and Suffex, it might produce an Affociation little inferior to that of the Southern Counties under the Earl of Manche fter; and might, by the Spring, be an occasion of that distraction to the Parliament, that they should not well know to what part to dispose their Armies; and the King might apply his own to that part, and purpose, as should seem most reasonable to him. was Sherend ge bae : yeb bu

THESE, and other reasons prevailing, the King gave the Lord Hopton order to profecute his design upon Suffex, in such manner as he thought fit; provided, that he was well affured, that Waller should not make advantage, upon that Enterprise, to find the way open to him to march into the West. And that he might be the better able to profecute the one, and to provide for the other, S. Faceb Aftley was likewise sent to him from Reading, with a thousand commanded Men of that Garrison, Wallingfard, and Oxford; which supply no sooner are

riv'd at Winchester, but the Lord Hopton resolv'd to visit Waller's Quarters, if it were possible to engage him; however that he might judge by the posture he was in, whether he were like to pursue his purpose for the West. Waller was then Quarter'd at Farnham, and the Villages adjacent, from whence he drew out his Men, and faced the Enemy, as if he intended to Fight, but, after some light Skirmishes for a day or two, in which he always receiv'd loss, he retired himself into the Castle of Farnham, a place of some strength; and drew his Army into the Town; and within three or four days, went himself to London, more effectually to sollicite Recruits, than his Letters had been able to do.

WHEN the Lord Hopton faw that he could attempt no farther upon those Troops, and was fully assur'd that Sr William Waller was himself gone to London, he concluded, that it was a good time to comply with the importunity of the Gentlemen of Suffex; and march'd thither, with fuch a Body of Horse and Foot, as he thought competent for the Service. The exceeding hard Frost made his march more easy through those deep dirry ways, than better Weather would have done; and he came to Arundel before there was any imagination that he had that place in his prospect. The place in it's Situation was strong; and though the Fortifications were not regular, but of the old fashion, yet the Walls were good, and the Graff broad, and deep; and though the Garrison was not numerous enough to have defended all the large circuit against a powerful Army, yet it was strong enough, in all respects, to have defied any fuddain Affault; and might, without putting themselves to much trouble, have been very secure against the Attempts of those without. But the Provisions of Victual. or Ammunition, was not fufficient to have endured any long Siege; and the Officer who Commanded, had not been accustom'd to the prospect of an Enemy. So upon an easy and short Summons, that threaten'd his obstinacy with a very rigorous chastisement, if he should defer the giving it up; either from the effect of his own fear, and want of Courage, or from the good inclinations of some of the Soldiers, the Castle was Surrender'd the third day; and appear'd to be a place worth the keeping, and capable, in a fliort time, to be made fecure against a good Army.

Arundel-Caftle Surrender'd to the Lord Hopton:

THE Lord Hopson, after he had stayed there five or fix days, and caused Provisions of all kinds to be brought in, committed the Command and Government thereof to Sr Edward Ford, High Sheriff of the County, with a Garrison of above two hundred Men; besides many good Officers; who desired, or were very willing, to stay there; as a place very favourable for the making Levies of Men, which they all intended.

tended. And, it may be, the more remain'd there, out of the weariness and fatigue of their late marches, and that they might spend the remainder of the Winter with better Accommodation.

THE News of Sr William Waller's return to Farnham with strong recruits of Horse and Foot, made it necessary to the Lord Hopton, to leave Arundel Cattle before he had put it into the good posture he intended. And, without well confidering the mixture of the Men he left there, whereof many were of Natures not easy to be govern'd, nor like to conform themselves to such strict Rules as the condition of the place required, or to use that industry, as the exigence, they were like to be in, made necessary, the principal thing he recommended and enjoyn'd to them was, "in the first place, setting "all other things aside, to draw in store of Provisions of all "kinds, both for the Numbers they were already, and for "fuch as would probably in a flort time be added to them; all which from the great plenty that Country then abounded in, was very easy to have been done. And if it had been done, that place would have remain'd long fuch a Thorn in the lide of the Parliament, as would have rendered it very uneasy to them, at least have interrupted the current of their o mainteen for to many house, it at reach WALLER'S Journey to London answer'd his expectation; and his Presence had an extraordinary operation, to procure any thing delired. He reported the Lord Hopton's Forces to be much greater than they were, that his own might be made proportionable to encounter them. And the quick progress that Lord had made in Suffex, and his taking Arundel Caltle, made them thought to be greater than He reported them to be. His so easily possessing himself of a place of that strength, which they supposed to have been impregnable, and in a County where the King had before no footing, awaken'd all their Jealousies and Apprehensions of the Affections of Kent, and all other places; and look'd like a Land-flood, that might roll they knew not how far; so that there needed no importunate follicitation to provide a remedy against this growing evil. The ordinary method they had used for recruiting their Armies by Levies of Voluntiers, and perswading the Apprentices of the City to become Soldiers, upon the Privilege they gave them for their Freedom, for the time they Fought for them, as if they had remained in their Matter's Service, was now too dull and lazy an expedient to relift this Torrent; they therefore refort to their inexhaultible Magazine of Men, their devoted City, to whole Affections the Person of Sr William Waller was most acceptable; and perswaded them immediately to cause two of their strongest Regiments of Auxiliaries, to march out of the Line to Farnham: which they consented to. Then they appointed the Earl of Effer to give his Orders to Sc William Balfour, with one thoufand of the Horse of his Army, likewise to observe Waller's Commands; who, with this great addition of Forces, made haft to his other Troops at Farnham; where he scarce rested, but after he had informed himself how the Lord Hopton's Troops lay Quarter'd, at too great a distance from each other, he march'd, according to his cultom in those occasions (as beating up of Quarters was his Master-piece) all the Night; and, by the break of day, encompass d'a great Village called Atton, where a Troop or two of Horle, and a Regiment of Foot of the King's lay in too much fecurity. However, the Horse took the Alarm quickly, and for the most part, made their escape to Winchester, the head Quarter; whither the Lord Hopton was return'd but the Night before from Arundel. Colonel Bole, who Commanded his own Regiment of Foot there, confifting of about five hundred Men; which had been drawn out of the Garrison of Wallingford, when he found himself encompassed by the Enemies Army of Horse and Foot, faw he could not defend himfelf, or make other refiltance than by retiring with his Men into the Churchi which he hoped to maintain for fo many hours, that relief might be fent to him; but he had not time to Barricadoe the doors; fo that the Enemy enter'd almost assoon; and after a short resistance, in which many were kill'do the Soldiers, overpower'd, threw down their Armes, and ask'd Quarter; which was likewife offer'd to the Colonel who refused it, and valiantly defended himself, till with the death of two or three of the Assailants, he was kill'd in the place; his Enemies giving him a teltimony of great Courage and Refolution.

WALLER knew well the impression the loss of this very good Regiment would make upon the Lord Hopton's Forces. and that the report which the Troops of Horse which had escaped, would make, would add nothing of Courage to their fellows: fo that there was no probability that they would make halt to advance; and therefore, with great celerity, the hard Frost continuing, he march'd with all his Army to Arundel Castle, where he found that Garrison as unprovided as he could with. For initead of encreasing the Magazine of Victual by Supplies from the Country; they had spent much of that Store which the Lord Hopton had provided. The Governour was a Man of Honelty and Courage, but unacquainted with that Affair, having no other experience in War, than what he had learn'd fince these Troubles. The Officers were many without Command, amongst whom one Colonel Bamford, an Irish-man, though he called himself Bamfield, was one; who, being a Man of wir and parts, applied all his faculties to improve the Faction, to which they were all naturally inclined, with a hope to make himfelf Governour. In this distraction Waller found them, and by some of the Soldiers running out to him, he found means again to fend in to them by which he fo encreased their Faction, and Animofity against one another, that, after he had kept them waking, with continual Alarms, three or four days, near half the Men being fick, and unable to do duty, father than they would truit each other longer, they gave the Place and Themselves up, as Prisoners of War upon Quarter, the Place being able to It is retaken have defended it felf against all that power, for a much longer by Sir will. time. Here the Learned and Eminent Mt chilling worth was taken Prisoner; who, out of kindness and respect to the Lord Hopton, had accompanied him in that march; and, being indisposed by the terrible coldness of the Season, chose to repole himself in that Garrison, till the Weather thould mend. Affoon as his Perfon was known, which would have drawn Reverence from any noble Enemy, the Clergy that attended that Army, profecuted him with all the inhumanity imaginable; so that, by their Barbarous usage, he died within few days; to the grief of all that knew him, and of many who

THE Lord Hopeon furtain'd the loss of that Regiment with extraordinary trouble of mind, and as a wound that would bleed inward; and therefore was the more inflamed with defire of a Battle with Waller, to make even all Accounts; and made what half he could, upon the first Advertisement, to have redeem'd that Misfortune; and hoped to have come time enough to Relieve Arundel Caltle; which he never sufpected would fo tamely have given themselves up? But that hope quickly varish'd, upon the undoubted Intelligence of that Surrender, and the News that Walter was return'd with a full Resolution to prosecute his delign upon the West: to which, befides the encouragement of his two late Successes, with which he was marvelloully elated, he was in fome de gree necessitated, out of apprehension that the Horse which belonged to the Earl of Effex's Army, might be speedily recalled; and the time would be quickly expired, that he had promised the Auxiliary Regiments of Landon to dilimis them.

knew him not but by his Book, and the Reputation he had with Learned Men.

Upon the News the King received of the great supply the Parliament had so suddainly sent to Waller, both from the Earl of Effex his Army, and from the City, he thought it necessary to fend such an addition of Foot as he could draw out of Oxford, and the Neighbour Garrisons. And the Earl of Brentford, General of the Army, who had a fast Friendthip with the Lord Hopton, expressing a good inclination to make him a vifit, rather than to fit still in his Winter Quarters, his Majesty was very willing he should, and cherished that disposition, being desirous that so great an Officer might be present in an Army, upon which so much of his hopes depended; and which did not abound with Officers of great Experience. So the General, with fuch Voluntiers as were ready to accompany him, went to Winchester; where he found the Lord Hopton in trouble for the loss of the Regiment of Foot at Alton, and with the unexpected assurance of the giving up of Arundel Castle. He was exceedingly reviv'd with the presence of the General, and defired to receive his Orders, and that he would take upon him the absolute Command of the Troops; which he as positively refused to do; only offer'd to keep him Company in all Expeditions, and to give him the best Assistance he was able; which the Lord Hopton was compell'd to be contented with; nor could there be a greater union and consent between two Friends: The General being ready to give his Advice upon all particulars; and the other doing nothing without communication with him, and then conforming to his opinion, and giving Orders accordingly.

Assoon as they were inform'd that Waller had drawn all his Troops together about Farnham, and meant to march towards them, they chearfully embraced the occasion, and went to meet him; and about Alresford, near the midway between Winchester and Farnham, they came to know how pear they were to each other; and, being in View, chose the ground upon which they meant the Battle should be Fought; of which Waller, being first there, got the advantage for the drawing up his Horse. The King's Army consisted of about five thousand Foot, and three thousand Horse; and Waller with S. William Balfour, exceeded in Horse; but they were upon the matter equal in Foot; with this only advantage, that both his Horse and Foot were, as they were always, much better Arm'd; no Man wanting any Weapon Offentive, or Defensive, that was proper for him; and Sr Arthur Hasterig's Regiment of Cuirassiers, call'd the Lobsters, were so formidable, that the King's naked and unarm'd Troops, among which few were better arm'd than with Swords, could not bear their impression.

The Battle at The King's Horse never behaved themselves so ill, as that Alressord, day. For the main Body of them, after they had sustained where &r W. one sierce Charge, wheeled about to an unreasonable distance; the advanant and left their principal Officers to shift for themselves. The tage ever the Foot behaved themselves very gallantly, and had not only the L. Hopton.

better of the other Foot, but bore two or three Charges from the Horse with notable Courage, and without being broken; whilst those Horse which stood upon the Field, and should have affifted them, could be perfwaded but to ftand. When the Evening drew near, for the approach whereof neither Party was forry, the Lord Hopton thought it necessary to leave the Field; and drawing off his Men, and carrying with him many of the wounded, he retired with all his Cannon and Ammunition, whereof he lost none, that Night to Reading: the Enemy being fo scatter'd, that they had no mind to pursue; only Waller himself made hast to Winchester, where he thought, upon this Success, to have been immediately admitted into that Castle; which was his own Inheritance. But he found that too well defended; and so return'd with taking revenge upon the City, by plundering it with all the Infolence and Rapine imaginable.

THERE could not then be any other estimate made of the loss Waller sustain'd, than by the not pursuing the visible advantage he had, and by the utter refusal of the Auxiliary Regiments of London and Kent, to march farther; who, within three or four days, left him; and return'd to their Habitations; with great Lamentation of their Friends who were miffing. On the King's fide, befides Common Men, and many good Officers, there fell that day the Lord John Stuart, Brother to the Duke of Richmond, and General of the Horse of that Army; and Sr John Smith, Brother to the Lord Carrington, and Commissary General of the Horse. They were both brought off the Field by the few Horse that stay'd with them, and did their duty; carried to Reading; and the next day to Abingdon, that they might be nearer to the Affiftance of the best remedies by Physicians and Surgeons. But they liv'd only to the fecond dreffing of their wounds; which were very many upon both of them.

THE former was a young Man of extraordinary hope, little more than one and twenty years of Age; who being of a more cholerick and rough Nature, than the other Branches of that Illustrious and Princely Family, was not delighted with the foftnesses of the Court, but had dedicated himself to the profession of Armes, when he did not think the Scene should have been in his own Country. His Courage was so signal that day, that too much could not be expected from it, if he had out-liv'd it; and he was so generally belov'd, that he could not but be very generally lamented. The other, Sr John Smith, had been train'd up from his Youth in the War of Flanders; being of an Ancient Roman Catholick Family; and had long the Reputation of one of the best Officers of Horse, Assoon as the first Troubles appear'd in Scotland, he betook himself to the Service of his own Prince; and from the beginning of the War to his own end, perform'd many fignal Actions of Courage. The death of these two eminent Ofsiders, made the Names of many who perished that day, the less inquired into and mention'd.

THIS Battle was Fought the 29th day of March: which was a very doleful entring into the beginning of the year 1644, and broke all the measures, and alter d the whole scheme of the King's Counfels: For whereas before, he hoped to have enter'd the Field early, and to have acted an Offensive part; he now discern'd, he was wholely to be upon the Defenfive; and that was like to be a very hard part too. For he found, within very few days after, that he was not only deprivd of the Men he had lost at Alresford, but that he was not to expect any recruit of his Army by a conjunction with Prince Rupert; who, he believ'd, would have return'd in time, after his great Success at Newark, with a strong Body both of Horse and Foot, from Shropshire, Cheshire, and North Wales: all which hopes were foon blafted; for the Prince had scarce put the Garrison of Newark in order, and provided it to endure another Attack, which they might have reasonably expected upon his Highness's departure (though indeed the shame of the defeat he had given that Parry, and the rage among the Officers, and Soldiers, when they faw by what a handful of Men they had been terrified, and subdued, broke and diffoly'd that whole Body within few days) when he was earnestly press'd from the Earl of Derby, to come into Lancashire to relieve him, who was already Belieged in his own firing House at Latham, by a great Body, with whom he was not able to contend. And to dispose the Prince the more willingly to undertake his relief, the Earl made ample promifes, "that within fo many days after the Siege should be "railed, with any defeat to the Enemy, he would advance his "Highness's Levies with two thousand Men, and supply him with a confiderable Sum of Money. And the Earl had likewife, by an Express, made the fame instance to the King at Oxford; from whence his Majeffy fent his Permission, and Approbation to the Prince, before his departure from Newark; hoping still that his Highness would be able to dispatch that Service in Lancalbire, and with the more notable recruits of Men in those parts, be able to return to Oxford by the time that it would be necessary for his Majesty to take the Field. But within a fhort time, he was disappointed of that expectation; for before the Prince could finish his Expedition into Lancashire (which he did with wonderful Gallantry; raised the Siege at Latham with a great execution upon the Enemy; and took two or three of their Garrisons obstinately defended;

and therefore with the greater Slaughter) the Marquis of New-Caftle was compell'd to retire, with his whole Army, within the Walls of York. He had been well able to have defended himself against the numerous Army of the Stores, and would have been glad to have been engaged with them, but he found he had a worse Enemy to deal with was will appear.

FROM the time that the Ruling Party of the Parliament The Affection discern'd that their General, the Earl of Effex, would never tion of few ferve their turn, or comply with all their defires, they refolv died Counties to have another Army apart, that should be more at their de-der the Earl votion; in the forming whereof, they would be fure to choose of Manchefuch Officers, as would probably not only observe their Or-fer. ders, but have the fame inclinations with them. Their pretence was, "that there were fo many difaffected Persons of the "Nobility, and Principal Gentry, in the Counties of Norfolk and Suffolk, that, if great care was not taken to prevent it, "there might a Body start up there for the King; which, upon "the fuccels of the Marquis of New-Cafele, whole Armes "then reach'd into Lincoln-shire, might grow very formida-"ble. For prevention whereof, they had formed an Allociation between Effect (a County, upon the influence of the Earl of Warwick, and the power of his Clergy, they most confided in) Cambridge-Shire, Suffolk, Norfolk, Bedford, and Huntington; in all which they had many Persons of whose entire Affections they were well affured; and, in most of them, there were few confiderable Persons who wish'd them ill. Of this Affociation they had made the Earl of Manchester General, to be subject only to their own Commands, and independent upon the Earl of Effex. Under Him, they choic Oliver Crommel to Command their Horse; and many other Officers, who never intended to be subject again to the King, and avow'd other Principles in Conscience and Religion, than had been before publickly declared.

To this General they gave Order, a to reside within that "Association; and to make Levies of Men, sufficient to keep those Counties in Obedience: for at first they pretended no more. But, in the secret Treaty made by S. Harry Pane with the secret, they were bound, assoon as the secret should enter into Tork-shire with their Army, that a Body of English Horse; Foot, and Cannon, should be ready to affish them, Commanded by their own Officers, as a Body apart: The secret not then trusting their own great Numbers, as equal to Fight with the English. And from that time they were much more careful to raise, and liberally supply, and provide for that Army under the Earl of Manchester, than for the other under the Earl of Essent And now, according to their agreement, upon the secret first entrance into Tork-shire, the Earl nte the joyn the Scots,

The Earl of of Manchester had likewise Order to march with his whole Manchester Body thither; having, for the most part, a Committee of the Parliament, whereof Sr Harry Vane was one, with him; as my to march there was another Committee of the Scotish Parliament always in that Army; there being also now a Committee of both Kingdoms reliding at London, for the carrying on the War.

THE Marquis of New-Caftle being thus pressed on both fides, was necessitated to draw all his Army of Foot and Cannon into York, with some Troops of Horse; and sent the Body of his Horse, under the Command of General Goring, to remain in those places he should find most convenient, and from whence he might best infest the Enemy. Then he sent an Express to the King, to inform him of the Condition he was in; and to let him know, "that he doubted not to de-"fend himself in that Post, for the term of fix Weeks, or two "Months; in which time, he hoped, his Majesty would "find some way to Relieve him, Upon receipt of this Letter, the King fent Orders to Prince Rupert, that "affoon as" "he had Reliev'd the Lord Derby, and recruited, and refresh'd "his Men, he should march, with what Expedition he could, "to Relieve York; where being joyn'd with the Marquis of "New-Castle's Army, there was hope they might Fight the "Enemy: and his Majesty would put himself into as good a " posture as he could to take the Field, without expecting the Prince.

The Queen retires from Oxford to Exeter.

ALL these ill Accidents falling out successively in the Winter, the King's Condition appear'd very fad; and the Queen being now with Child, it wrought upon her Majesty's mind very much; and disposed her to so many Fears and Apprehensions of her Safety, that she was very uneasy to her felf. She heard every day " of the great Forces raised, and "in a readiness, by the Parliament, much greater than they "yet ever had been; which was very true; and "that they "refolv'd, affoon as the Seafon was ripe, to march all to Oxford. She could not endure to think of being Befieged; and, in conclusion, resolv'd not to stay there, but to go into the West; from whence, in any distress, she might be able to Embark for France. Though there feem'd reasons enough to diffwade her from that inclination, and his Majesty heartily wish'd that she could be diverted, yet the perplexity of her mind was fo great, and her fears so vehement, both improv'd by her indisposition of Health, that all Civility and Reason obliged every Body to submit. So, about the beginning of April, the begun her Journey from Oxford to the West; and, by moderate Journies, came well to Exeter; where she intended to stay, till she was deliver'd; for she was within little more than one Month of her time; and, being in a place out of the reach of any Alarm, the recover'd her Spirits to a reasonable convalescence.

IT was now about the middle of April, when it concern'd the King with all possible fagacity, to foresee what probably the Parliament meant to attempt with those vast Numbers of Men which they every day levied; and thereupon to conclude, what it would be possible for his Majesty to do, in those Exigencies to which he was like to be reduced. The Intelligence, that Waller was still design'd for the Western Expedition, made the King appoint his whole Army to be drawn together to a Rendezvous at Marlborough; where himself was present, and, to his great satisfaction, found the Body to confift, after all the losses and misadventures, of no less than fix thousand Foot, and above four thousand Horse. There that Body remain'd for some weeks, to watch, and intend Waller's Motion, and to Fight with him as foon as was possible. Many things were there consulted for the future; and the quitting Reading, and some other Garrisons, proposed, for the encreasing the Field Forces: yet nothing was positively refolv'd, but to expect clearer evidence what the Parliament Armies would dispose themselves to do.

So the King return'd to Oxford, where, upon the defire of The Parlie the Members of Parliament who had been called thither, and ment at Oxdone all the Service they could for the King, they were for ford Prothe present dismissed, that they might, in their several Coun-October. ties, fatisfy the People of the King's importunate defire of Peace, but how insolently it had been rejected by the Parliament; and thereupon induce them to contribute all they could to his Majesty's Assistance. They were to meet there again in the Month of October following.

THEN, that his Majesty might draw most of the Soldiers of that Garrison with him out of Oxford, when he should take the Field, that City was perswaded to compleat the Regiment they had begun to form, under the Command of a Colonel whom the King had recommended to them; which they did raise to the Number of a thousand Men. There were likewise two other Regiments raised of Gentlemen and their Servants, and of the Scholars of the several Colleges and Halls of the University; all which Regiments did Duty there punctually, from the time that the King went into the Field, till he return'd again to Oxford; and all the Lords declared, "that upon any emergent occasion, they would mount their "Servants upon their Horses, to make a good Troop for a "fuddain Service; which they made good; and thereby, that Summer, perform'd two or three very considerable and important Actions.

By this time there was reason to believe, by all the Intelligence that could be procured, and by the change of his Quarters, that Waller had laid afide his Western March; at least that it was suspended; and that, on the contrary, all endeavours were used to recruit both His, and the Earl of Essex's Army, with all possible expedition; and that neither of them should move upon any Action till they should be both compleat in greater Numbers, than either of them had yet marched with. Hereupon, the King's Army remov'd from Marlborough to Newbury; where they remain'd near a Month, that they might be in a readiness to attend the motion of the Enemy, and to affift the Garrisons of Reading, or Wallingford; or to draw out either, as there should be occasion.

THERE had been several deliberations in the Council of War, and always very different opinions, what should be done with the Garrisons when the King should take the Field: and the King himself was irresolute upon those Debates, what to do. He communicated the several reasons to Prince Rupert by Letters, requiring His advice; who, after he had return'd Answers, and receiv'd Replies, made a hasty journey to Oxford from Chefter, to wait upon his Majesty. And it was then positively resolved, "that the Garrisons of Oxford, Wallingford, Abingdon, Reading, and Banbury, should be " reinforced, and strengthen'd with all the Foot; that a good "Body of Horse should remain about Oxford, and the rest "should be sent into the West to Prince Maurice. If this Counsel had been pursued steadily and resolutely, it might probably have been attended with good Success: Both Armies of the Enemy would have been puzled what to have done, and either of them would have been unwilling to have engaged in a Siege against any place so well provided, and resolv'd; and it would have been equally uncounsellable to have march'd to any diffance, and have left fuch an Enemy at their backs, that could fo easily and quickly have united, and incommoded any March they could have made.

Bur as it was even impossible to have administer'd such advice to the King, in the streight he was in, which being pursued might not have prov'd inconvenient, so it was the unhappy temper of those who were called to those Councils, that resolutions, taken upon full Debate, were seldom prosecuted with equal resolution and steadiness; but changed upon new, shorter Debates, and upon objections which had been answer'd before: Some Men being in their Natures irresolute, and inconstant, and full of objections, even after all was determined according to their own proposals; others being positive, and not to be alter'd from what they had once declared, how unreasonably soever, or what alterations soever there were in the Affairs. And the King himself frequently consider'd more the Person who spoke, as he was in his grace, or his prejudice, than the Counfel it felf that was given; and always suspected, at least trusted less to his own judgement than he ought to have done; which rarely deceiv'd him

To much as that of other men.

THE Persons with whom he only consulted in his Martial The Persons Affairs, and how to carry on the War, were (befides Prince with when Rupert, who was at this time absent) the General, who was consulted in made Earl of Brentford; the Lord Wilmot, who was General his Military of the Horse; the Lord Hopson, who usually Commanded an Affairs as Army apart, and was not often with the King's Army, but this time. now present; 'Sr Jacob Aftley, who was Major General of the Army; the Lord Digby, who was Secretary of State; and Sr John Colepepper Malter of the Rolls; for none of the Privy Council, those two only excepted, were called to those Confultations; though fome of them were still advised with, for the better Execution, or Profecution, of what was then and there resolv'd.

THE General, though he had been, without doubt, a very good Officer, and had great Experience, and was still a Man of unquestionable Courage and Integrity; yet he was now much decayed in his parts, and, with the long continued custom of immoderate drinking, dozed in his Understanding, which had been never quick and vigorous; he having been always illiterate to the greatest degree that can be imagined. He was now become very deaf, yet often pretended not to have heard what he did not then contradict. and thought fit afterwards to disclaim. He was a Man of few Words, and of great Complyance, and usually deliver d that as His opinion, which he forefaw would be grateful to the King.

WILMOT was a Man of a haughty and ambitious Nature, of a pleasant Wit, and an ill Understanding, as never considering above one thing at once; but he confider'd that one thing so impatiently, that he would not admit any thing else to be worth any Confideration. He had, from the beginning of the War, been very averse to any advice of the Privy Council, and thought fit that the King's Affairs (which depended upon the Success of the War) should entirely be govern'd and conducted by the Soldiers, and Men of War; and that no other Counfellors should have any Credit with his Majesty. Whilst Prince Rupert was present, his exceeding great prejudice, or rather Personal Animosity against him, made any thing that Wilmot faid or proposed, enough slighted and contradicted; and the King himself, upon some former account and observation, was far from any indulgence to his Person, or effeem of his Parts. But now, by the Prince's ablence, and his being the fecond Man in the Army, and the Contempt he had of the old General, who was there the only Officer above him, he grew marvellously elated, and look'd upon himself as one whose advice ought to be follow'd, and submitted to in all things. He had, by his excessive good Fellowship (in every part whereof he excelled, and was grateful to all the Company) made himself so popular with all the Officers of the Army, especially of the Horse, that he had, in truth, a very great Interest; which he desired might appear to the King, that he might have the more Interest in Him. He was positive in all his Advices in Council, and bore Contradiction very impatiently; and because he was most Contradicted by the two Privy Counsellors, the Secretary, and the Master of the Rolls, who, he saw, had the greatest Influence upon the King, he used all the Artifices he could to render them unacceptable and fuspected to the Officers of the Army, by telling them, what they had faid in Council; which he thought would render them the more ungrateful; and, in the Times of Jollity, perswaded the old General to believe that they invaded his Prerogative, and meddled more in the Business of the War, than they ought to do; and thereby made him the less disposed to concur with them in Advice, how rational and feafonable foever it was; which often put the King to the trouble of converting him.

The Lord Hopton was a Man Superior to any Temptation, and abhorr'd enough the licence, and the levities, with which he saw too many corrupted. He had a good Understanding, a clear Courage, an Industry not to be tired, and a Generosity that was not to be exhausted; a Virtue that none of the rest had: but in the Debates concerning the War, was longer in resolving, and more apt to change his mindaster he had resolv'd, than is agreeable to the Office of a Commander in Chief; which render'd him rather sit for the Second, than

for the Supreme Command in an Army

Sr Jacob Aftley was an honest, brave, plain Man, and as fit for the Office he exercised, of Major General of the Foot, as Christendom yielded; and was so generally esteem'd; very discerning and prompt in giving Orders, as the occasions required, and most chearful, and present in any Action. In Council he used sew, but very pertinent words; and was not at all pleased with the long Speeches usually made there; and which rather consounded, than inform'd his Understanding: so that he rather collected the ends of the Debates, and what he was himself to Do, than enlarged them by his own Discourses; though he forbore not to deliver his own mind.

Vol. II. Part 2.

always agreed in their Opinions; and being, in their parts, much Superior to the other, usually prevail'd upon the King's Judgement to like what they approved: yet one of them, who had in those Cases the Ascendent over the other, had that Excess of Fancy, that he too often, upon his own recollecting and revolving the grounds of the Resolutions which had been taken, or upon the Suggestions of other Men, changed his own mind; and thereupon caused Orders to be alter'd, which produced, or were thought to produce, many Inconveniences.

This unsteadiness in Counsels, and in matters resolved upon, made the former Determination concerning the Garrifons, to be little confider'd. The King's Army had lain above three Weeks at, and about Nembury; in which time their Numbers were nothing improved, beyond what they had been upon their Muster near Marlborough, when the King was prefent. When it was known that both the Parliament Armies were march'd out of London; That under Effen to Windfor; and That of Waller, to the parts between Hertford-Bridge, and Basing, without any purpose of going farther West; the King's Army march'd to Reading; and in three Reading days, his Majesty being present, they slighted and demolish'd quirted by all the works of that Garrison: And then, which was about Forces. the middle of May, with the Addition of those Soldiers which encreased the Army five and twenty hundred old Soldiers more, very well Officer'd, the Army retired to the Quarters about Oxford, with an opinion, that it would be in their power to Fight with one of the Enemy's Armies; which they longed exceedingly to do. THE King return'd to Oxford, and resolv'd to stay there till he could have better Information what the Enemy intended; which was not now so easy as it had formerly been. For, fince the Conjunction with the Scotifb Commissioners in one Council, for the carrying on the War, little business was brought to be Confulted in either of the Houses; and there was much greater Secrecy than before; few or none being admitted into any kind of Trust, but they whose Affections were known to concur to the most desperate Counsels. So that the Deligns were still entirely form'd, before any part of them were communicated to the Earl of Effex; nor was more communicated at a Time than was necessary for the present Execution; of which he was fensible enough, but could not The Intention was, "that the two Armies, which "march'd out together, should afterward be distinct; and " should only keep together, till it appear'd what Course the "King meant to take; and if he stayed in Oxford, it would "be fit for both to be in the Siege; the Circumvallation being "very great, and to be divided in many places by the River; which would keep both Armies still asunder under their se"veral Officers. But, if the King march'd out, which they might reasonably presume he would, then the purpose was,

"that the Earl of Essen should follow the King, wherever he "went; which, they imagin'd, would be Northward; "and
"that Waller should march into the West, and subdue That.
So that, having so substantially provided for the North, by the Scots, and the Earl of Munchester; and having an Army under the Earl of Essen, much Superior in Number to any the King could be attended with; and the third, under Waller, at Liberty for the West; they promised themselves, and too reasonably, that they should make an End of the War that Summer.

It was about the tenth of May, that the Earl of Effex and So William Waller march'd out of London, with both their Armies; and the very next day after the King's Army had quitted Reading, the Earl of Effex, from Windfor, fent Forces to possessin; and recommended it to the City of London, to provide both Men, and all other things necessary for the keeping it; which the Memory of what they had suffer'd for the two past years, by being without it, easily disposed them to do. By this means, the Earl had the Opportunity to joyn with Waller's Army when he should think fit; which before they could not do with Convenience, or Security. Nor did they ever after joyn in one Body, but kept at a fit Distance, to be able, if there were Occasion, to help each other.

THE Earl of Effex's Army confifted of all his old Troops, which had Winter'd about St Albans, and in Bedford-shire; and being now encreased with four Regiments of the Traindbands, and Auxiliaries within the City of London, did not amount to less then ten thousand Horse and Foot. Waller had likewife received a large Recruit from London, Kent, and Suffex; and was little inferior in Numbers to Effex, and in Reputation above him. When the King's Army retired from Reading the Horse Quarter'd about Wantage, and Farrington, and all the Foot were put into Abingdon, with a Resolution to quit, or defend that Town, according to the manner of the Enemies Advance towards it; that is, if they came upon the East fide, where, befides some indifferent Fortifications. they had the advantage of the River, they would maintain and defend it; if they came on the West side from Wantage, and Farrington, they would draw out and Fight, if the Encmy were not by much Superior in Number; and, in that Case, they would retire with the whole Army to Oxford. BEING fatisfied with this Resolution, they lay in that quiet,

Posture, without making the least Impression upon the Enemy, of their purpole to quit the Town, and to command him to itay, and not to advance till his Majesty came to him; which he made all possible hast to do. But before the Messenger could return, the Army was within fight of Oxford; and fo.

ver : by beating up his Quarters; which might easily have been ir fedone; or restraining them from making Incursions where they had a mind; all which was imputed to the ill Humour, they Was, and Negligence of Wilmot. The Earl of Effex advanced with r he his Army towards Abingdon; and upon the East part of the and Town; which was that which they had hoped for, in order hat. to their defending it. But they were no fooner advertised of , by it, but the General, early the next Morning, march'd with all rmy the before his Majesty had the least notice, or suspicion of it. Forces. He the Earl of ice, then called Waller to bring up his Army near him, that they Effex. might relolve in what manner to proceed; and he had his head Quarter at Wantage: and fo, without the striking one Blow, they got the Possession of Reading, Abingdon; and were Masters of all Berk-shire; and forced the King to draw his whole Army of Horle and Foot on the North fide of Oxford;

> King from being inclosed in it. THIS was the deplorable Condition to which the King was reduced before the end of the Month of May; infomuch that it was generally reported at London, "that Oxford was "taken, and the King a Prisoner; and others more Confidently gave it out, "that his Majesty resolv d to come to Lon-"don: of which the Parliament was not without some Apprehention, though not fo much, as of the King's putting himself into the hands of the Earl of Esfex, and into his Protection; which They could not endure to think of; and this troubled them so much, that the Committee of both Kingdoms, who Conducted the War, writ this Letter to their Geand he of it. In order to which, introfill, with re > where they were to feed on his own Quarters, and to confider, how to keep Oxford it self from being Besieged, and the the Foot out of Abingdon, the Horse being come thither in Abingdon the Night to make good the Retreat: and all this was done quitted by

My Lord,

"We are credibly inform'd, that his Majesty intends to come for London. We desire you, that you will do your Endeavour to inform your self of the same; and if you think that his Majesty intends at all to come to the Armies, that you acquaint us with the same; and do nothing therein, until the Houses shall give Direction.

So much Jealoufy they had of the Earl, and the more, because they saw not else what the King could do; who could not entertain any reasonable Expectation of Encrease, or Addition of Force from the North, or from the West; Prince Rupers being then in his march into Lancashire, for the Relief of the Earl of Derby (belieged in his Castle of Latham) and Prince Maurice being still engaged in the unfortunate Siege of Lyme in Dorset Shire, a little Fisher Town; which, after he had lain before it a Month, was much more like to hold out, than it was the first day he came before it. In this Perplexity, the King fent the Lord Hopton to Briftol, to provide better for the Security of that Important City; where he knew Waller had many Friends; and himself resolv'd yet to flay at Oxford, till he faw how the two Armies would dispose themselves; that, when they were so divided that they could not presently joyn, he might Fight with one of them; which was the greatest hope he had now left.

I'm was very happy that the two Armies lay so long quiet near each other, without pressing the Advantages they had, or improving the Consustant and Distraction, which the King's Forces were, at that time, too much inclined to. Orders were given so to Quarter the King's Army, that it might keep the Rebels from passing over either of the Rivers, Chermel, or Isis, which run on the East and West sides of the City; the Foot being, for the most part, Quarter'd towards the Cherwel, and the Horse, with some Dragoons, near the Iss.

In this politure all the Armies lay quiet, and without Action, for the space of a day; which somewhat composed the minds of those within Oxford, and of the Troops without; which had not yet recover'd their dislike of their having quitted Abingdon, and thereby of being so streighten'd in their Quarters. Some of Waller's Forces attempted to pass the Isis at Newbridge; but were repulsed by the King's Dragoons. But the next day Essex, with his whole Army, got over the Thames at Sanford-Ferry, and march'd to Isis, where he made his Quarters; and, in his way, made a halt upon Bullington-Green, that the City might take a full view of his Army, and he of it. In order to which, himself, with a small

Party of Horse, came within Cannon shot; and little Parties of Horse came very near the Ports, and had light Skirmishes with some of the King's Horse, without any great hurt on either side.

THE next Morning, a strong Party of the Earl's Army endeavour'd to pass over the Cherwel, at Gosworth Bridge; but were repulled by the Mulqueteers with very confiderable loss; and so retired to their Body. And now the Earl, being engaged, with his whole Army, on the East side of the River Cherwel, whereby he was disabled to give, or receive any speedy Assistance to, or from Waller; the King resolv'd to attempt the repossessing himself of Abingdon, and to take the opportunity to Fight with Waller fingly, before he could be reliev'd from the other Army. In order to this, all the Foot were in the Evening drawn off from the Guard of the Paffes, and march'd through Oxford in the Night towards Abingdon; and the Earl of cleveland, a Man of lignal Courage, and an excellent Officer upon any bold Enterprife, advanced, with a Party of one hundred and fifty Horse, to the Town it self; where there were a thousand Foot, and four hundred Horse of Waller's Army; and enter'd the fame, and killed many, and took some Prisoners: but upon the Alarm, he was to overpower'd, that his Prisoners escaped, though he killed the Chief Commander, and made his Retreat good, with the loss only of two Officers, and as many Common Soldiers; and fo, both the attempt upon Abingdon was given over, and the defign of Fighting Waller laid afide; and the Army return'd again to their old Post, on the North side of Oxford.

Sr Jacob Aftey undertook the Command himself at Gosworth Bridge, where he perceiv'd the Earl intended to force his Paffage; and presently cast up Breast-works, and made a Redoubt for the defence of his Men, and Repulsed the Enemy, the second time, very much to their damage and loss; who renew'd their Assault two or three days together, and planted Cannon to facilitate their Passage, which did little hurt; but they still lost many Men in the Attempt. On the other side, Waller's Forces from Abingdon did not find the new Bridge so well defended; but overpowering those Guards, and having got Boats, in which they put over their Men, both above and below, they got that Passage over the River Isis: by which they might have brought over all their Army, and fallen upon the King's Rear, whilst he was defending the other side.

It was now high time for the King to provide for his own fecurity, and to escape the danger he was in, of being shut up in Oxford. Waller lost no time, but the next day passed over five thousand Horse and Foot, by Newbridge: the Van whereof Quarter'd at Ensam, and, the King's Foot being drawn off from Gofworth Bridge, Essen immediately brought his Men over the Cherwel; and Quarter'd that Night at Blechingdon; many of his Horse advancing to Woodstock; so that the King feem'd to them to be perfectly that in between them; and to his own People, his Condition seem'd so desperate, that one of those with whom he used to advise in his most Secret Affairs, and whole Fidelity was never suspected, proposed to him to render himfelf, upon Conditions, to the Earl of Effex; which his Majesty rejected with great indignation; yet had the goodness to conceal the Name of the Proposer; and said, that possibly he might be found in the hands of the Earl of " Effex, but he would be dead first. Word was given, "for "all the Horse to be together, at such an hour, to expect "Orders; and a good Body of Foot with Cannon, march'd through the Town towards Abingdon; by which, it was concluded, that both Armies would be amused, and Waller induced to draw back over Newbridge: and, affoon as it was Evening, the Foot, and Cannon, return'd to their old Post on the North fide.

THE King resolved, for the encouragement of the Lords of the Council, and the Persons of Quality who were in Oxford, to leave his Son the Duke of York there; and promised, if they should be Besieged, "to do all he could to Relieve "them, before they should be reduced to Extremity. He appointed them, "that two thousand and five hundred choice "Musqueteers should be drawn out of the whole Foot, under the Command of Sr Jacob Astley, and sour experienced "Colonels; all which should, without Colours, repair to the "place-where the Horse attended to receive Orders, and that "the rest of the Foot should remain together on the North "side, and so be applied to the defence of Oxford, if it should "be Belieged.

At I things being in this order, on Monday the third of June, about nine of the Clock at Night, the King, with the Prince; and those Lords, and others who were appointed to attend him, and many others of Quality who were not appointed, and only thought themselves less secure if they should stay behind, march'd out of the North Port, attended by his own Troop, to the place where the Horse, and Commanded Foot, waited to receive them; and from thence, without any halt, march'd between the two Armies, and by Day-break were at Hanboraugh, some Miles beyond all their Quarters. But the King rested not till the Asternoon, when he found himself at Burford; and then concluded that he was in no danger to be overtaken by any Army that was to follow with Baggage, and a Train of Artillery: so that he was content to restresh his Men there; and supp'd himself; yet was not with out Apprehension that he might be follow'd by a Body of the Enemies Horse; and therefore, about nine of the Clock, he continued his March from Burstord over the Cotswold, and by Mid-night reach'd Burson upon the Water; where he gave himself, and his wearied Troops, more rest and refreshment.

THE Morning after the King left Oxford, the Foot march'd again through Oxford, as if they meant to go to Abingdon, to continue that Amusement which the day before had prevailed with Waller, to fend many of his Men back, and to delay his own Advance; and likewise, that Quarters might be provided for them against their return; which they did by Noon. The Earl of Effect had that Morning, from Blechnigden, fent fome Horse to take a view of Oxford; and to learn what was doing there. And they feeing the Colours standing, as they had done two days before, made him conclude, that the King was still there, and as much in his power as ever. Waller had earlier Intelligence of his Majesty's Motion, and sent a good Body of Horse to follow him, and to retard his March, till he could come up; and his Horse made such hait, that they found in Burford fome of the straggling Soldiers, who out of weariness, or for love of Drink, had stay'd behind their Fellows. The Earl of Effex follow'd likewife with his Army, and Quarter'd at Obippen-Norton; and Waller's Horse were as far as Broadway, when the King had reach'd Evelbam; where he intended to rest, as in a secure place; though his Garrison at Temkesbury had been, the Night before, surprised by a strong Party from Gloceffer; the Chief Officers being killed, and the rest taken Prisoners; most of the Common Soldiers making their escape, and coming to Evelham. But, upon Intelligence that both Armies follow'd by strong marches, and it being possible that they might get over the River Avon about Stratford, or some other place, and so get between the King and Worcester, his Majesty changed his purpose of staying at Evelham, and presently march a to Worteffer; having given order for the breaking of the Bridge at Parlbore; which was, unwarily, to near done before all the Troops were pais'd, that, by the fuddain falling of an Arch, Major Bridges, of the Prince's Regiment, a Man of good Courage and Conduct, with two of three other Officers of Horse, and about twenty Common Men, fell unfortunately into the Aven, and were drown'd a A s lo back long at

WALLER opposed this resolution all he could; and urged some Order, and Determination of the Committee of both Kingdoms in the point; and, "that the West was af-"fign'd to him, as his Province, when the two Armies should "think fit to fever from each other. However, Effex gave him politive Orders, as his General, "to march according to "the Advice of the Council of War; which he durft not disobey, but fent grievous Complaints to the Parliament, of the utage he was forced to submit to. And they at Westminfler, were so incensed against the Earl of Essex, that they writ a very angry, and imperious Letter to him, in which they reproach'd him, of for not submitting to the Directions "which they had given; and required him "to follow their "former Directions, and to suffer Waller to attend the Service "of the West. Which Letter was brought to him before he had march'd above two days Westward. But the Earl chose rather to Answer their Letter, than to Obey their Order; and writ to them, "that their Directions had been contrary to "the Discipline of War, and to Reason; and that, if he "Thould now return, it would be a great encouragement to "the Enemy in all places; and Subscribed his Letter, "Your Innocent, though suspected Servant, Essex; and then profecuted his Resolution, and continued his march for this visibility changed his purpelleW ads

Waller to- WHEN Waller found there was no remedy, he Obey'd his cefter, after Orders with much Diligence and Vigour; and profecuted his march towards Worcester, where his Majesty then was; and, in his way, perswaded, rather than forced, the Garrison of Sudely Caltle, the strong House of the Lord Chandon, to deliver up that place to him. The Lord of that Gaftle was a young Man of Spirit and Courage; and had, for two years ferv'd the King very bravely in the Head of a Regiment of Horse, which himself had raised at his own Charge; but had lately, out of pure weariness of the Fatigue, and having spent most of his Money, and without any Diminution of his Affection, left the King, under pretence of Travel; but making Lendon his way, he gave himself up to the pleasures of that place; which he enjoy'd, without confidering the lifue of the War, or shewing any Inclination to the Parliament; nor did he, in any degree contribute to the delivery of his House; which was at first imagined, because it was so ill, or not at all, defended. It was under the Government of Sr William Morton, a Gentleman of the long Robe; who, in the beginning of the War, cast off his Gown, as many other Gallant Men of that Protession of the Law did, and serv'd as Lieutenant Colonel in the Regiment of Horse under the Lord Chandon; and had given so frequent Testimony of fignal Courage in feveral Actions, in which he had receiv'd many wounds, both by the Pittol and the Sword, that his Mettle was never fulpected; and his Fidelity as little question'd: And after many years of Imprisonment, sustained with great Firmnels and Constancy, he liv'd to receive the Reward of his Merit, after the Return of the King; who made him first a Serjeant at Law, and afterwards a Judge of the King's Bench; where he fate many years, and discharged the Office with much Gravity and Learning; and was very terrible to those who chose to live by Robbing on the High-way. He was unfortunate, though without Fault, in the giving up that Castle in so unfeafonable a Conjuncture; which was done by the Faction and Artifice of an Officer within, who had found means to go out to Waller, and to acquaint him with the great wants of the Garrison; which indeed had not plenty of any thing: and so, by the Mutiny of the Soldiers, it was given up; and the Governour made Prisoner, and sent to the Tower; where he remain'd some years after the end of the War. From hence Waller, with great Expedition march'd to Evelham; where the evil Inhabitants received him willingly; and had, alloon as the King left them, repair'd their Bridge over the Avon, to facilitate his coming to them; which he could not elle lo loon have done.

The King rested some days at Worcester, whereby he very much restreshed his Troops, which were there spared from doing duty; and likewise, by the Loyalty of that good Town, and the Assection of the Gentry of that County, who retired thither for their Security, he procured both Shoes and Stockings, and Money for his Soldiers: and then, upon good Information, that Waller was march'd out of Evesham with his whole Army towards Worcester, which he would probably Besiege, the King resolv'd not to be found there; and therefore, having left that City well provided, and in good heart, his Majesty remov'd with his little Army to Bewalley, that he might keep the River Severa between Him and the Enemy; the Foot being Quarter'd together at Bewalley, and the Horse by the side of the River towards Bridgenorts. posture in which the King was, made Waller conclude that his Majesty intended his Course to Shrewsbury, and to the more Northern Parts. And it is true, that, without any fuch Resolution, Orders were sent to Shrewsbury, Bridgeworth, Ludlow, and other Garrisons, "that they should make all pos-"fible Provisions of Corn, and other Victual; which they "flould cause, in great quantities, to be brought thither; which confirm'd Waller in his former Conjecture, and made him advance with his Army beyond the King, that he might be nearer Shremsbury than He. But, God knows, the King was without any other Delign, than to avoid the Enemy; with whom he could not, with such a handful of Foot, and without Cannon, propose reasonably to Fight a Battle: and he had too many good Reasons against going to either of those places, or to those parts, which Waller conceived him inclin'd to; and his Majesty might well assume the Complaint, and Expression of King David, "that he was hunted as " a Patridge mos the Mountains; and knew not whither to refort, or to what place to repair for reft. In this Perplexity, it look'd like the Bounty of Providence, that Water was advanced to far: upon which, the King took a fuddain Resolution, to return with all Expedition to Worcester, and to make hast to Evelham; where, having broke the Bridge, and to left the River of Avon at his back, he might be able, by quick Marches, to joyn with that part of his Army, which he had left at Oxford; and might thereby be in a Condition to Fight with Waller, and to profecute any other Defign. Upon this good Refolution, care was taken for all the Boats to come both from Bridgeworth, and Worcester, that the Foot might, with the more speed and ease, be carried thither; all which succeeded to with Infornuch, that the next day, being Embark'd early in the Morning, the Foot arriv'd so soon at Worcester, that they might very well have march'd that Night to Evelbam, but that many of the Horse, which were Quarter'd beyond Bondley towards Bridgenorth, could not possibly march at that rate, nor come up foon enough; fo that it was necessary that both Horse and Foot should remain that Night together at Worcefter; which they did accordingly to vend than again 2010

THE next Morning, the King found no cause to after any thing in his former Resolution; and receiv'd good Intelligence, that Waller, without knowing any thing of his motion, remain'd still in his old Quarters; whereupon he march'd very falt to Evelbam; nor would he stay there; but gave Order for the Horse and Foot, without delay, to march through it; after he had provided for the breaking down the Bridge, and made the Inhabitants of the Town pay two poliure hundred joy, they did. So that, on Thursday the twentieth of June, which was within seventeen days after he had left Oxford in that disconsolate Condition, the King found himself in the head of his Army, from which he had been to fever'd, after fo many Accidents and melancholick Perplexities; to which t his Majesty has been seldom exposed. Nor can all the circumstances of that Peregrination be too particularly, and punctually fet down. For as they administer'd much delight after they were passed, and gave them great Argument of acknowledging God's good Providence in the preservation of the King, and, in a manner, fnatching him as a Brand out of the Fire, and redeeming him even out of the hands of the Rebels; so it cannot be ungrateful, or without some pleasure to Posterity, to see the most exact Relation of an Action so full of danger in all respects, and of an escape so remarkable.

> Fighting with his Majesty. In the short time the King had been absent, the Garrison at Oxford was not idle. When the King in the Spring had prepared for the Field, and in order thereunto had drawn out the Garrison at Reading, it was thought to no purpose to keep lesser Garrisons, at a less distance from Oxford; and thereupon the Garrison at Bostal House, reputed a strong place, upon the Edge of Oxford-fbire and Buckingham-fbire, was appointed to demolifh the Works and Fortifications, and to retire, and joyn with the Army: which was no fooner done, but the Garrison at Aylesbury, that had felt the Effects of the others ill Neighbourhood, possessed the place, and put a Garrison into it; which, after the King had left Oxford, and both the Armres of Effex and Waller, were gone from before it, gave little less trouble to that City, and obstructed the Provisions which should come thither, almost as much as one of the Armies had done. This brought great Complaints and Clamour from the Country, and from the Town, to the Lords of the Council; and was ever made an Excuse for their not complying with the Commands they fent out, for Labourers to work upon the Fortifications; which was the principal work in hand; or for any other fervice of the Town. When both Armies were drawn off to fuch a distance in following the King, that there feem'd for the present no reasonable apprehension of being Besieged, the Lords consider d of a Remedy to apply to this Evil from Bostal House; and receiving encouragement from Colonel Gage (of whom they had a great efteem, and of whom we shall speak shortly more at large) who offer'd to undertake the reducing it, they appointed a Party of Commanded Men of the Foot, which the King had left there, with three pieces of Cannon, and a Troop of Horse of the Town, to obey his Orders, who, by the break of day, appear'd before the place; and in a short time, with little reliffance, got possession of the Church, and the Out-Houses, and then batter'd the House it self with his Cannon; which they within, would not long endure; but delir'd a Parley. Upon which the House was render'd, with the Ammunition, one piece of Ordnance, which was all they had; and much good provision of Victual, whereof they had plenty for Horse and Man; and had liberty given them to go away with their Armes, and Horses; very easy Conditions for so strong a Post; which was obtain'd with the loss of one inferior Officer, and two or three Common Men. Here the Colonel left a Garrison, that did not only defend Oxford from those mischievous Incursions, but did very near support it self, by the Contribution it drew from Buckingham-shire, belides the Prey it frequently took from the very Neighbourhood of Aylesbury.

THE Earl of Effex, by flow and easy Marches, and without any Opposition or Trouble, enter'd into Dorset-shire; and by his great Civility, and Affability towards all Men, and the very good Discipline in his Army, wrought very much upon the People. Infomuch that his Forces rather encreased, than diminish'd; which had, during his being before Oxford, been much lessen'd, not only by the Numbers which were kill'd and hurt, but by the running away of many, whilst the sharp Encounters continued at Gosworth Bridge. It can hardly putation,

imagin'd, how great a Difference there was in the humoursposition, and manner of the Army under Essex, and the ther under Waller, in their behaviour and humanity towards e People; and, consequently, in the Reception they found hong them; the demeanour, and carriage of those under faller being much more ungentlemanly, and barbarous, than at of the other: belides that the People, in all places, were ot without some Affection, and even reverence towards the arl, who, as well upon his own account, as the memory

f his Father, had been always universally popular.

WHEN he came to Blandford, he had a great mind to nake himself Master of Weymouth, if he could compass it vithout engaging his Army before it; which he refolv'd Not o do; however it was little out of his way to pass near it. Colonel Abburnham, then Governour of Weymouth, was made thoice of for that Command, upon the Opinion of his Courage, and Dexterity; and, to make way for him, Sr Anthony, Albler Cooper had been, the Year before, removed from that Charge; and was thereby so much disobliged, that he quitted the King's Party, and gave himself up, Body and Soul, to the Service of the Parliament, with an implacable Animolity against the Royal Interest. The Colonel had been intene upon other things, and not enough sollicitous to finish the Fortifications, which were not strong enough to defy an Army, yet too strong to be deliver'd upon the Approach of one: I shall fay the less of this matter, because the Governour afterwards pressed to have the whole examin'd before a Council of War, where he produced a Warrant, under the hand of Prince Maurice, " that, the Town being untenable, he " should, upon the advance of the Earl of Effex, put a sufficient strength into Portland-Castle, and retire thither; which he had done; and was, by the Council of War, abfolv'd from any Crime. Yet, the truth is, however absolv'd, he lost Reputation by it; and was thought to have left the Town too foon, though he meant to have return'd again, after he had visited Portland. But in the mean time the Towns-weymouth men mutiny'd, and fent to the Earl of Effex when he was deliver'd so near the Town; whereupon he came thither; which he the Earl of would not otherwise have done; and gave the Garrison leave Effex. to march with their Armes to Prince Maurice; and so became Master of Weymouth; and leaving Men enough out of the Country to defend it, without any delay, he profecuted his march to Lyme; from whence Prince Maurice, upon the news Lyme reof the loss of Weymouth, had retired with half enough towards liev'd by Exeter, with a Body of full five and twenty hundred Foot, him. and eighteen hundred Horse; after he had put a Garrison of five hundred Men into Wareham, and with some loss of Reputation, for having lain fo long with fuch a strength before to vile and untenable a place, without reducing it.

Assoon as the King had joyn'd his Army at Whitney, which now confifted of full five thousand five hundred Foot and very near four thousand Horse, with a convenient Train of Artillery, he refolv'd no longer to live upon his own Quarters, which had been too much wasted by Friends and Enemies; but to visit the Enemy's Country; and so the next day, he march'd towards Buckingham, where he would ftay, and expect Waller of whose motion he yet heard nothing and from whence, if he appear'd not, his Majesty might enter into the Affociated Counties, and so proceed Northward, if, upon Intelligence from thence, he found it reasonable. Whilst the King staid at Buckingham, and thought himself now in a good Condition to fight with the Enemy (his Troops, every day bringing in store of Provisions, and, being now in a Country where they were not expected, met with many Cartloads of Wine, Grocery, and Tobacco, which were passing, as in secure roads, from London to Coventry, and Warmick; all which were very welcome to Buckingham) a new, and unexpected Trouble felt upon him by the ill humour, and Faction in his own Army. Wilmot continued still fullen and perverse, and every day grew more insolent; and had contracted such an Animosity against the Lord Digby, and the Master of the Rolls, that he perswaded many Officers of the Army, especially of the Horse, where he was most entirely obey'd, to joyn in a Perition to the King, "that those two Counfellors might be excluded, and be no more present in Councils of War; which they promifed to do.

WALLER remain'd still in Worcester-shire; upon which it was again Confulted, what the King was to do. Some propofed "the marching prefently into the Affociated Counties; others, " to lose no time in endeavouring to joyn with Prince a Rupert. Wilmot, without ever communicating it with the King, positively advised, "that they might presently march "towards London, and now both their Generals, and Armies were far from them, make tryal what the true affection of the City was; and that, when the Army was marched as far as S: Albans, the King should fend such a gracious Message both to the Parliament, and City, as was most like to preevail upon them; and concluded, as if he knew "that this away of proceeding would be very much approved of by the This extravagaint motion, with all the Circumstances of it, troubled the King very much; yet he thought not fit absolutely to reject it, lest it might promote that Pettion, which he knew was framing among the Officers; but withed them; "that fuch a Mellage should be prepared, and cern'd his march towards London, to the Lords of the Council at Oxford; that in so weighty an Affair he might receive Their Counsel. To that purpose the Lord Digby, nd the Master of the Rolls, were sent to Oxford; who, after vo days, return'd without any Approbation of the march, the Message by the Lords. But all that Intrigue fell of it if upon the fure Intelligence, "that Waller had left Worcefter-fibre, and marched, with what speed he could, to find his Majesty; which gave new Argument of Debate. WHEN the King had fo dextroully deceived, and cluded him by his quick march to and from Worcester, Waller, who had not timely information of it, and less suspected it, thought t not to the purpose to tire his Army with long marches in tope to overtake him; but first shew'd it at all the Walls of Worcester, to terrify that City, which had contemn'd his power year before, when it was not so well able to refift it. But he quickly differn'd he could do no good there: then he narched rowards Glocefter, having fent to Colonel Maffey to end him some Men out of Glocester; which he, being a Creature of Effex's, refused to do. Upon this Denial, he marched into Warnick-shire; and appointed his Rendezvous in Keisson field, the place where the first Battle was fought. There he received an addition of feven Troops of Horfe, and about fix hundred Foot, from Warwick and from Coventry, with eleven pieces of Ordnance. With this Recruit he marched confidently towards the King; of which his Majesty being inform'd, that he might the fooner meet him, he marched with his Army to Brackley, when Waller was near Banbury; and the Armies coming shortly in view of each other, upon a fair Sunthine in the Afternoon, after a very wet Morning, both endeavourd to possess a piece of Ground they well knew to be of Advantage; which being nearer to Waller, and the King passing his whole Army through the Fown of Banbury, before he could come to it, Waller had first his Men upon it in good Order of Battle, before the King could reach thither: to that the King lay that Night in the Field, half a mile East of Banbury, the River of Cherwel being between the two Armies.

THE King resolv'd to make Waller draw off from that Ad-The fight at antage ground, where he had flood two days; and in order Cropredythereunto, marched away, as if he would enter farther into Bridge. Northampton shire: and he no fooner moved, but Waller likewife drew off from his ground, and coasted on the other side of the River, but at such a distance, that it was thought he had no mind to be engaged. The Van of the King's Army was led by the General, and Wilmot: in the Body was the King, and the Prince, and the Rear confifted of one thousand commanded Foot, under Colonel Thelwell, with the Earl of Northampton's and the Earl of Cleveland's Brigades of Horse. And, that the Enemy might not be able to take any advantage, a Party of Dragoons was fent to keep cropredy-Bridge, until the Army was passed beyond it. The Army marching in this order, Intelligence was brought to the King, "that "there was a Body of three hundred Horse, within less than "two miles of the Van of the Army, that marched to joyn "with Waller; and that they might be easily cut off, if the "Army mended their pace. Whereupon, Orders were fent to the foremost Horse, "that they should move faster, the Van and the Middle having the fame Directions, without any notice given to the Rear. Waller quickly discern'd the great distance that was suddainly grown between the King's Body and his Rear, and presently advanced with fifteen hundred Horse, one thousand Foot, and eleven pieces of Cannon to cropredy-Bridge, which were quickly too strong for the Dragoons that were left to keep it, and which made a very faint Reliftance: so that this Party advanced above half a mile, pursuing their Design of cutting off the King's Rear, before they should be able to get up to the Body of the Army. To facilitate this Execution, he had fent one thousand Horse more, to pass over at a Ford a mile below Cropredy-Bridge, and to fall upon the Rear of all. Timely notice being given of this to the Earl of Cleveland, who was in the Van of that Division, and "of the Enemy's having passed at Cropredy (which was confirm'd by the running of the Horse, and Scatter'd Foot) "and that there stood two Bodies of Horse without moving, "and faced the Army: Thereupon the Earl presently drew up his Brigade to a rising ground that faced that pass, where he discern'd a great Body of the Rebels Horse drawn up, and ready to have fallen upon his Rear. It was no time to expect Orders; but the Earl, led by his own great Spirit, Charged presently that Body with great fury, which sustain'd it not with equal Courage; losing a Cornet, and many Prifoners.

This Alarm had quickly reached the King, who fent to the Van to return, and himself drew up those about him, to a little Hill beyond the Bridge; where he saw the Enemy preparing for a second Charge upon the Earl of cleveland. The King Commanded the Lord Bernard Stuart, a Valiant young Gentleman, who Commanded his own Guards, "to make hast to the Assistance of the Rear; and, in his way, to "Charge those two Bodies of Horse which faced his Majesty. He, with above a hundred of Gallant and Stout Gentlemen return d instantly over the Bridge, and made hast towards those those two Bodies of Horse; who, seeing their fellows Routed by the Earl of cleveland, were then advancing to Charge him n the Flank, as he was following the Execution. But the presence of this Troop made them change their mind; and, fter a very little stay, accompany their fellows in their Flight; which very much facilitated the Defeat, that quickly enfued.

THE Earl of Cleveland, after his short Encounter, made a stand under a great Ash (where the King had but half an hour before stay'd and din'd) not understanding what the Enemy could mean by advancing to fast, and then flying to foon; when he perceiv'd a Body of their Horse of sixteen Cornets, and as many Colours of Foot, placed within the Hedges, and all within Musquet-shot of him, and advancing upon him; which He likewise did upon Them with notable Vigour; and having stood their Musquet and Carabine-shot, he Charged them so surriously, being resolutely seconded by all the Officers of his Brigade, that he Routed both Horse and Foot, and Chafed them with good execution beyond their Cannon: all which, being eleven pieces, were taken; with two Barricadoes of Wood, which were drawn upon Wheels, and in each seven small Brass and Leather Guns, charg'd with Case-shot; most of their Canoneers were kill'd, and the General of their Ordnance taken Prisoner. This Man, one Weemes, a Scots-man, had been as much obliged by the King, as a Man of His Condition could be, and in a manner very unpopular: for he was made Master Gunner of England, with a Pention of three hundred pounds per annum for his Life (which was looked upon as some disrespect to the English Nation) and having never done the King the least Service, he took the first opportunity to Differve him; and having been engaged against him, from the beginning of the Rebellion, he was now preferr'd by them, for his eminent Disloyalty, to be General of the Ordnance in the Army of Sr William Waller; who was very much advited by him in all matters of Importance. Besides Weenes, there was taken Prisoner Baker, Lieutenant Colonel to Sr William Waller's own Regiment, and five or fix Lieutenant Colonels, and Captains, of as good Names as were amongst them; with many Lieutenants, Ensigns, and Cornets, Quartermasters; and above one hundred Common Soldiers; many more being flain in the Charge. The Earl puriued them as far as the Bridge; over which he forced them to retire, in spite of their Dragoons, which were placed there to make good their Retreat: all which fled with them, or before. And so the Earl having clear'd that side of the River. and not knowing how far he was from the Army, retired, as he had good reason to do; having lost, in this notable Action, Vol. II. Part 2.

two Colonels, Sr William Boteler, and Sr William Clarke, both Gentlemen of Kent, of fair Fortunes, who had raised, and arm'd their Regiments at their own Charge, who were both kill'd dead upon the place, with one Captain more of another Regiment, and not above fourteen Common Soldiers.

AT the same time, the Earl of Northampton discover'd that Party of the Enemies Horse, which had found a passage over the River a Mile below, to follow him in the Rear; and presently faced about with those Regiments of his Brigade. Upon which, without enduring the Charge, the whole Body betook themselves to Flight, and got over the Pass they had fo newly been acquainted with, with little loss, because they prevented the Danger; though many of them, when they were got over, continued their Flight fo far, as if they were still pursued, that they never return'd again to their Army. The Lord Bernard, with the King's Troop, feeing there was no Enemy left on that fide, drew up in a large Field opposite to the Bridge; where he stood, whilst the Cannon, on the other fide, play'd upon him, until his Majesty and the rest of the Army passed by them, and drew into a Body upon the Fields near Wilfcot. Walter instantly quitted Cropredy, and drew up his whole Army upon the high grounds, which are between Cropredy and Hanwell, opposite to the King's Quarters about a Mile; the River of cherwel, and some low grounds, being between both Armies; which had a full view of each other.

IT was now about three of the Clock in the Afternoon, the Weather very fair, and very warm (it being the 29th day of June) and the King's Army being now together, his Majesty resolv'd to prosecute his good Fortune, and to go to the Enemy, fince They would not come to Him: and to that purpose, sent two good Parties, to make way for him to pass both at cropredy-Bridge, and the other pais a Mile below; over which the Enemy had so newly passed: both which places were strongly guarded by them. To Cropredy they fent such strong Bodies of Foot, to relieve each other as they should be pressed, that those fent by the King thither could make no Impression upon them; but were repulsed, till the Night came, and fevered them; all Parties being tired with the duty of the Day. But they who were fent to the other pass, a Mile below, after a thort Relistance, gained it, and a Mill adjoyning; where, after they had kill'd some, they took the rest Prisoners; and from thence, did not only defend themselves, that, and the next Day, but did the Enemy much hurt; expecting still that their Fellows should master the other pass, that so they might advance together.

anher other Expedient. Some Men, from the Conference they had with the Prisoners, others from other Intelligence, made no doubt, but that if a Message were now fent of Grace and Pardon to all the Officers and Soldiers of that Army, they would forthwith lay down their Armes 1 and it was very notorious, that Multitudes ran every day from thence. How this Meffage should be fent, so that it might be effectually deliver'd, was the only Question that remain'd: and it was agreed, "that Sr Edward Walker (who was both Garter King at Armes, and Secretary to the Council of War) "flould "be fent to publish that his Majesty's Grace. But he wisely defired, "that a Trumpet might be first fent for a Pass; the barbarity of that People being notorious, that they regarded not the Laws of Armes, or of Nations. Whereupon a Trumpet was fent to S. William Waller, to defire "a Safe Conduct for a Gentleman, who should deliver a gracious Meffage "from his Majesty. After two hours Consideration, he return'd Answer, "that he had no power to receive any Mef-"fage of Grace, or Favour from his Majesty, without the "Consent of the two Houses of Parliament at Westminster, "to whom his Majesty, if he pleased, might make his addresses. And as foon as the Trumpet was gone, as an Evidence of his Resolution, he caused above twenty shot of his greatest Cannon to be made at the King's Army, and as near the place as they could, where his Majesty used to be.

WHEN both Armies had stood upon the fame ground, and in the same posture, for the space of two Days, they both drew off to a greater Distance from each other; and, from that time, never faw each other. It then quickly appear'd, by Waller's still keeping more aloof from the King, and his marching up and down from Buckingbam, fomerimes towards Northampton, and fometimes towards Warwick, that he was without other Defign, than of recruiting his Army; and that the Defeat of that day at Cropredy was much greater, than it then appear d to be; and that it even broke the heart of his Army. And it is very probable, that if the King, after he had rested and refreshed his Men three or four days, which was very necessary, in regard they were exceedingly tired with continual Duty, belides that the Provisions would not hold longer in the same Quarters, had follow'd Waller, when it was evident He would not follow the King, he might have destroy'd that Army without Fighting: for it appear'd afterwards, without it's being pursued, that within fourteen days after that Action at Cropredy, Waller's Army, that before confifted of eight thousand, was so much wasted, that there remain'd not with him half that Number.

Bur the truth is, from the time that the King discover'd Kk 2

that mutinous Spirit in the Officers, govern'd by Wilmot, at Buckingham, he was unfatisfied with the Temper of his own Army, and did not delire a through Engagement, till he had a little time to reform some, whom he resolv'd never more heartily to trust; and to undeceive others, who, he knew, were missed without any malice, or evil Intention. But when he now found himself so much at Liberty from two great Armies, which had so streightly encompassed him, within little more than a Month; and that he had, upon the matter, defeated one of them, and reduced it to a State, in which it could, for the present, do him little harm; his heart was at no eafe, with apprehention of the terrible fright the Queen would be in (who was newly deliver'd of a Daughter, that was afterwards Married to the Duke of Orleans) when the faw the Earl of Effex before the Walls of Exeter, and should be at the same time inform'd, that Waller was with another Army in pursuit of himself. His Majesty resolv'd therefore, with all possible Expedition, to follow the Earl of Esex, in hopes that he should be able to fight a Battle with him, before Waller should be in a Condition to follow him: and his own strength would be much improv'd, by a Conjunction with Prince Maurice; who, though he retired before Effex, would be well able, by the North of Devon shire, to meet the King, when he thould know that he march'd that way.

His Majesty had no sooner taken this Resolution, than he gave notice of it to the Lords of the Council at Oxford; and fent an Express into the West, to inform the Queen of it; who, by the way, carried Orders to the Lord Hopton, "to draw what Men he could out of Monmouth shire, and South "Wales, into Bristol; that himself might meet his Majesty "with as many as he could possibly draw out of that Garrison. So, without any delay, the whole Army, with what Expedition was possible, march'd towards the West over the Cotswold to Cirencester; and so to Bath; where he arriv'd on the 15th day of July, and staid there one whole day, to refresh his Army; which stood enough in need of it.

THE King had scarce march'd two days Westward, when he was surprised with ill news from the North; for, after he had, by an Express from Oxford, receiv'd intelligence, "that "Prince Rupert had not only reliev'd York, but totally de-"feated the Scots, with many particulars to confirm it (all which was fo much believ'd there, that they had made publick Fires of Joy for the Victory) he now receiv'd quite contrary information, and was too furely convinced, that his whole Army was defeated. It was very true, that, after many great and noble Actions perform'd by Prince Rupert in the Relief of Latham, and the Reduction of Bolton, and all other places in that large County (Manchester only excepted) in which the Rebels loft very many, much Blood having been shed, in taking places by Affault, which were too obstinately defended; the Prince had march'd out of Lancashire with so good Reputation, and had given his Orders so effectually to Goring, who lay in Lincoln-shire with that Body of Horse that belong'd to the Marquis of New-Castle's Army, that they happily joyn'd him; and march'd together towards Tork, with such Expedition, that the Enemy was so surprised, that they found it necessary to raise the Siege in Confusion enough; and leaving one whole fide of the Town free, drew to the other fide, in great Disorder and Consternation; there being irreconcilable differences, and jealousies, between the Officers, and, indeed, between the Nations: the English resolving to joyn no more with the Scots, and They, on the other lide, as weary of their Company, and Discipline; so that the Prince had done his Work; and if he had fate still, the Enemies great Army would have moulder'd to nothing, and been exposed to any advantage his Highness would take of them.

Bur the dismal Fate of the Kingdom would not permit to An Account much Sobriety of Counsel: One fide of the Town was no of the Battle fooner free, by which there was an entire Communication of Marstonwith those in the Town, and all Provision brought in abundantly out of the Country, but the Prince, without confulting with the Marquis of New-Castle, or any of the Officers within the Town, fent for all the Soldiers to draw out, and put the whole Army in Battalia, on that fide where the Enemy was drawn up; who had no other hope to preserve them but a present Battle, to prevent the reproaches and mutinies which distracted them. And though that Party of the King's Horse which Charged the Scots, so totally Routed and Defeated their whole Army, that they fled all ways for many Miles together, and were knock'd on the head, and taken Prifoners by the Country, and Lefly their General fled ten Miles, and was taken Prisoner by a Constable (from whence the News of the Victory was speedily brought to Newark, and thence fent by an Express to Oxford; and so received and ipread as aforefaid) yet the English Horse, Commanded by Fairfax and Cromwell, Charged so well, and in such excellent Order, being no fooner broken than they rallied again, and Charged as briskly, that, though both Fairfax and Cromwell were hurt, and both above the Shoulders, and many good Officers kill'd, they prevailed over that Body of Horse which opposed them, and totally routed, and beat them off the Field; and almost the whole Body of the Marquis of New-Castle's Foot were cut off.

THE Marquis himself, and his brave Brother, St Charles

th

Cavendift (who was a Man of the nobleft, and largest mind, though the least, and most inconvenient Body that liv'd) Charged in the head of a Troop of Gentlemen, who came out of the Town with him, with as much Gallantry and Courage, as Men could do. But it was so late in the Evening before the Battle begun, that the Night quickly fell upon them; and the Generals return'd into the Town, not enough knowing their own loss, and perform'd very few Compliments to each other. They who most exactly describe that unfortunate Battle, and more unfortunate abandoning that whole Country (when there might have been means found to have drawn a good Army together) by Prince Rupert's halty departure with all his Troops, and the Marquis of New-Caftle's as halty departure to the Sea fide, and taking Ship, and Transporting himself out of the Kingdom, and all the ill Consequences thereupon, give so ill an Account of any Conduct, or Discretion, in the Managery of that Affair, that, as I can take no pleasure in writing of it, so Posterity would receive little pleasure, or benefit, in the most particular Relation of it.

THIS may be faid of it, that the like was never done, or heard, or read of before; that two great Generals, whereof one had still a good Army left, his Horse, by their not having perform'd their Duty, remaining upon the matter entire, and much the greater part of his Foot having retired into the Town, the great execution having fall upon the Northern Foot; and the other, having the absolute Commission over the Northern Counties, and very many Confiderable places in them still remaining under his Obedience, should both agree in nothing elfe, but in leaving that good City, and the whole: Country, as a prey to the Enemy; who had not yet the Courage to believe that they had the Victory; the Scots having been fo totally routed (as hath been faid before) their General made Prisoner by a Constable, and detained in Custody, till most part of the next day was past; and most of the Officers, and Army, having march'd, or run above ten Miles Northward, before they had News that they might fecurely return: And though the Horse under Fairfax and Crommell had won the day, yet they were both much wounded, and many others of the best Officers kill'd, or so maim'd that they could not, in any thort time, have done more hurt: so that if there had been any Agreement to have concealed their loss, which might have been done to a good Degree (for the Enemy was not possessed of the Field, but was drawn off at a distance, not knowing what the Horse, which had done so little, might do the next day) there might probably many Advantages have appear'd, which were not at the instant in view; however, they might both have done that as securely afterwards, as they did then unseasonably.

But neither of them were Friends to such Deliberation; but, assoon as they were refresh'd with a little sleep, they both sent a Messenger to each other, almost at the same time; the one, "that he was resolv'd, that Morning, to march away with his Horse, and as many Foot as he had lest; and the other "that he would, in that Instant, repair to the Sea-side, and Transport himself beyond the Seas; both which they immediately perform'd; the Marquis making hast to scarborough, there Embarked in a poor Vessel, and arriv'd at Hambourgh: the Prince, with his Army, begun his March the same Morning towards Chesser. And so York was lest to the discretion of St Thomas Glembam, the Governour thereof, to do with it as He thought sit; being in a Condition only to deliver it up with more Decency, not to defend it against an Enemy that would require it.

WHEREAS, if Prince Rupert had stay'd with the Army he march'd away with, at any reasonable Distance, it would have been long before the Jealoufies, and Breaches, which were between the English and Scotish Armies, would have been enough composed to have agreed upon the renewing the Siege; fuch great quantities of Provision being already brought into the Town: and the Scots talked of nothing but returning into their own Country, where the Marquis of Mountrose had kindled already a Fire, which the Parliament of Edenborough could not quench. But the certain intelligence, "that the Prince was march'd away without thought of re-"turning, and that the Marquis had Embark'd himself, reconciled them fo far (and nothing elfe could) that, after two days, they return'd to the Posts they had before had in the Siege; and fo streighten'd the Town, that the Governour, when he had no hope of Relief, within a Fortnight was compelled to deliver it up; upon as good Articles for the Town, York deliand the Gentry that were in it, and for Himself, and the few ver'd to the Soldiers he had left, as he could propose: And so he march'd Parliament with all his Troops to Carlifle; which he afterwards defended Forces.

The Times afterwards grew so bad, and the King's Affairs succeeded so ill, that there was no Opportunity to call either of those two great Persons to Account for what they had done, or what they had left undone. Nor did either of them ever think fit to make any particular Relation of the grounds of their Proceeding, or the causes of their misadventures, by way of Excuse to the King, or for their own Vindication. Murther of the King, produced a Letter in the King's own hand, which he receiv'd when he was upon his March from Lancashire towards York; in which his Majesty said, "that his "Affairs were in so very ill a State, that it would not be "enough, though his Highness raised the Siege from York, "if he had not likewise beaten the Scotish Army; which he "understood to amount to no less than a peremptory Order to "Fight, upon what disadvantage soever: and added, "that "the disadvantage was so great, the Enemy being so much "Superior in number, it was no wonder he lost the day. But as the King's Letter would not bear that fense, so the greatest Cause of the Misfortune was the precipitate entring upon the Battle, affoon as the Enemy drew off; and without Confulting at all with the Marquis of New-Caftle, and his Officers; who must needs know more of the Enemy, and consequently how they were best to be dealt with, than his Highness could do. For he law not the Marquis, till, upon his Summons, he came into the Field, in the head of a Troop of Gentlemen, as a private Captain, when the Battle was ranged; and which, after a very short salutation, immediately begun; those of the Marquis's Army, who came out of the Town, being placed upon the ground left by the Prince, and assign'd to them; which much indisposed both Officers and Soldiers to the work in hand, and towards those with whom they were to joyn in it.

THEN it was too late in the day to begin the Fight, if all the other ill circumstances had been away; for it was past three in the Afternoon: whereas, if it had been deferr'd till next Morning, in which time a full Consultation might have been had, and the Officers and Soldiers grown a little acquainted with each other, better success might have been reafonably expected; nor would the Confusion and Consternation the other Armies were then in, which was the only excuse for the present Engagement, have been the less; but, on the contrary, very much improved by the delay; for the Bitterness and Animosity between the Chief Commanders was such. that a great part of the Army was march'd fix Miles, when it appeard, by the Prince's manner of drawing his Army together to that ground, that his resolution was to Fight: the speedy Intelligence whereof prevail'd, and nothing else could, with those who were gone so far, to return; and with the rest, to unite and concur in an Action, that, in human reason, could only preserve them; and if that opportunity had not then been so unhappily offer'd, it was generally believ'd that the Scots would, the next Morning, have continued their March Northward; and the Earl of Manchester would have been necessitated to have made his retreat, as well as he could,

nto his Affociated Counties; and it would have been in the Prince's power to have chosen which of them he would have destroy'd.

Bur then of all the rest, his going away the next Mornng with all his Troops, in that manner, was most unexcusable; because most prejudicial, and most ruinous to the King's Affairs in those parts. Nor did those Troops ever after bring any confiderable advantage to the King's Service, but moulder'd away by degrees, and the Officers, whereof many were Gentlemen of Quality, and great Merit, were kill'd upon beating up of Quarters, and little Actions not worth their prefence. The truth is, the Prince had some secret Intimation of the Marquis's purpose of immediately leaving the Town, and Embarking himself for the parts beyond the Seas, before the Marquis himself sent him word of it; upon which, in great passion and rage, he sent him notice of his resolution presently to be gone, that he who had the Command of all those parts, and thereby an obligation not to desert his Charge, might be without any imagination that the Prince would take such a distracted Government upon him, and leave him any excuse for his departure: and if in this joynt distemper, with which they were both transported, any Persons of discretion and honour, had interposed, they might, in all probability, have prevailed with both, for a good understanding between them, or at least for the suspension of their present Resolutions, and considering what might best be done. But they both resolv'd so soon, and so soon executed what they refolved, that very few had the least suspicion of their Intentions, till they were both out of distance to have their Conversion attempted.

ALL that can be faid for the Marquis is, that he was to utterly tired with a Condition and Employment to contrary to his Humour, Nature, and Education, that he did not at all confider the means, or the way, that would let him out of it, and free him for ever from having more to do with it. And it was a greater wonder, that he fustain'd the vexation and fatigue of it so long, than that he broke from it with so little circumspection. He was a very fine Gentleman, active, and full of Courage, and most accomplish'd in those Qualities of Horsemanship, Dancing, and Fencing, which accompany a good breeding; in which his delight was. Befides that he was amorous in Poetry, and Mulick, to which he indulged the greatest part of his time; and nothing could have tempted him out of those paths of pleasure which he enjoy'd in a full and ample Fortune, but Honour and Ambition to serve the King when he faw him in diltrefs, and abandon'd by most of those who were in the highest degree obliged to him, and by him.

him. He lov'd Monarchy, as it was the foundation and support of his own greatness, and the Church, as it was well constituted for the splendour and security of the Crown; and Religion, as it cherish'd, and maintain'd that Order and Obedience that was necessary to Both; without any other passion for the particular Opinions which were grown up in it, and distinguished it into Parties, than as he detested whatsoever was like to disturb the Publick Peace.

HE had a particular Reverence for the Person of the King, and the more extraordinary Devotion for that of the Prince, as he had had the Honour to be trusted with his Education as his Governour; for which Office, as he excelled in some, so he wanted other Qualifications. Though he had retired from his great Truft, and from the Court, to decline the insupportable Envy which the powerful Faction had contracted against him, yet the King was no sooner necessitated to possess himself of some place of strength, and to raise some Force for his Defence, but the Earl of New-Castle (he was made Marquis afterwards) obey'd his first call; and, with great expedition and dexterity, seifed upon that Town; when till then there was not one Port Town in England, that avow'd their Obedience to the King: and he then prefently raifed fuch Regiments of Horse and Foot, as were necessary for the present state of Affairs; all which was done purely by his own interest, and the Concurrence of his numerous Allies in those Northern Parts; who with all alacrity obey'd his Commands, without any charge to the King; which he was not able to supply.

AND after the Battle of Edge-bill, when the Rebels grew fo strong in York-shire, by the influence their Garrison of Hull had upon both the East and West Riding there, that it behoved the King presently to make a General, who might unite all those Northern Counties in his Service, he could not choose any Man so sit for it, as the Earl of New-Castle, who was not only posses'd of a present Force, and of that important Town, but had a greater Reputation and Interest in Tork-shire it self, than, at that present, any other Man had : the Earl of Cumberland being at that time, though of entire Affection to the King, much decayed in the vigour of his Body, and his Mind, and unfit for that Activity which the Season required. And it cannot be denied, that the Earl of New-Castle, by his quick march with his Troops, assoon as he had receiv'd his Commission to be General, and in the depth of Winter, redeem'd, or rescued the City of York from the Rebels, when they look'd upon it as their own, and had it even within their grafp: and affoon as he was Mafter of it, he raised Men space, and drew an Army together, with which a ich he e Fought many Battles, in which he had always (this last aly excepted) Success and Victory.

HE liked the Pomp, and absolute Authority of a General ell, and preferv'd the Dignity of it to the full; and for the scharge of the outward State, and Circumstances of it, in ts of Courtely, Affability, Bounty, and Generofity, he abunded; which, in the infancy of a War, became him, and ade him, for some time, very acceptable to Men of all conditions. But the substantial part, and fatigue of a Geeral, he did not in any degree understand (being utterly unequainted with War) nor could submit to; but referred all hatters of that Nature to the discretion of his Lieutenant Geeral King; who, no doubt, was an Officer of great Expeience and Ability, yet, being a Scots-man, was in that conuncture, upon more disadvantage than he would have been, f the General himself had been more intent upon his Command. In all Actions of the Field he was still present, and never absent in any Battle; in all which he gave instances of in invincible Courage and Fearlessness in danger; in which he exposing himself notoriously did sometimes change the ortune of the Day, when his Troops begun to give ground Such Articles of Action were no fooner over, than he retired to his delightful Company, Musick, or his softer pleasures, to all which he was fo indulgent, and to his eafe, that he would not be interrupted upon what occasion soever; informuch as he fometimes denied admission to the Chiefest Officers of the Army, even to General King himself, for two days together; from whence many inconveniencies fell out.

FROM the beginning, he was without any reverence of regard for the Privy Council, with few of whom he had any acquaintance; but was of the other Soldiers mind, that all the business ought to be done by Councils of War, and was always angry when there were any Overtures of a Treaty; and therefore, especially after the Queen had Landed in Yorkbire, and staid so long there, he consider dany Orders he received from Oxford, though from the King himself, more negligently than he ought to have done; and when he thought himself sure of Hull, and was sure that he should be then Mafter entirely of all the North, he had no mind to march nearer the King (as he had then Orders to march into the Affociated Counties, when, upon the taking of Bristol, his Majety had a purpose to have march'd towards London on the other fide) out of apprehension that he should be eclipsed by the Court, and his Authority overshadow'd by the Supemority of Prince Rupert; from whom he defird to be at diltance: Yet when he found himself in distress, and necessitated to draw his Army within the Walls of York, and faw no way to be reliev'd but by Prince Rupert, who had then done great feats of Armes in the relief of Newerk, and afterwards in his Expedition into Lancashire, where he was at that time, he writ to the King to Oxford, either upon the knowledge that the absoluteness, and illimitedness of his Commission was generally much spoken of, or out of the Conscience of some discourse of his own to that purpose; which might have been reported; "that he hoped his Majesty did believe, "that he would never make the least scruple to obey the "Grandchild of King James: And assuredly, if the Prince had cultivated the good inclinations the Marquis had towards him, with any civil and gracious Condescensions, he would have found him full of duty and regard to his Service, and Interest.

Bur the strange manner of the Prince's coming, and undeliberated throwing himself, and all the King's hopes, into that fuddain and unnecessary Engagement, by which all the force the Marquis had raised, and with so many difficulties preferv'd, was in a moment cast away and destroy'd, so transported him with peffion and despair, that he could not compole himself to think of beginning the work again, and involving himself in the same undelightful condition of Life, from which he might now be free. He hoped his past meritorious Actions, might outweigh his present abandoning the thought of future Action; and fo, without farther confideration, as hath been faid, he transported himself out of the Kingdom, and took with him General King; upon whom, they who were content to spare the Marquis, poured out all the Reproaches of "Infidelity, Treason, and Conjunction "with his Country-men; which, without doubt, was the effect of the universal Discontent, and the miserable Condition to which the People of those Northern Parts were on the suddain reduced, without the least foundation, or ground for any fuch reproach: and as he had, throughout the whole Course of his Life, been generally reputed a Man of Honour, and had exercised the highest Commands under the King of Sweden with extraordinary ability, and fuccess, so he had been profecuted by some of his Country-men with the highest malice, from his very coming into the King's Service; and the fame malice purfued him after he had left the Kingdom, even to his death.

THE loss of England came so soon to be lamented, that the loss of York, or the too soon deserting the Northern Parts, were comparatively no more spoken of; and the constant and noble behaviour of the Marquis in the change of his Fortune, and his chearful submission to all the streights, necessities, and discomforts, which are inseparable from Banishment, without ithout the least application to the Usurpers, who were posfled of his whole Estate, and upon which they committed I imaginable and irreparable Wast, in destroying all his Toods of very great Value, and who were still equally abprr'd, and despised by him; with his readiness and alacrity rain to have embark'd himfelf in the King's Quarrel, upon e first reasonable occasion, so perfectly reconciled all good In to him, that they rather observ'd, what he had Done. nd Suffer'd for the King and for his Country, without farher inquiring what he had Omitted to do, or been overfeen

THIS fatal blow, which so much chang'd the King's conlition, that till then was very hopeful, made not fuch an impression upon his Majesty, but that it made him pursue his former Resolution, to follow the Earl of Essex, with the more mpatience; having now in truth nothing else to do. But being inform'd that the Earl had not made any long marches, and that the Queen, upon the first News of the Earl's drawng near, though she had been little more than a fortnight deliver'd, had left Exeter, and was removed into Cornwal; from whence, in a short time, she embark'd for France (the The Queen Prince of Orange having sent some Dutch Ships of War, to retires into attend her Commands in the Harbour of Falmouth; and from thence her Majesty transported her self) his Majesty march'd more flowly, that he might encrease his Army from Briftol, and other places; making no doubt, but that he should engage the Army of the Earl of Effex, who was already near Exeter, before he should be able to return to London.

THE Earl of Effex's good Fortune now begun to decline: he had not proceeded with his accustom'd wariness, and skill, but run into Labyrinths, from whence he could not difintangle himself. When he had march'd to the length of Exeter, which he had some thought of Besieging, without any imagination that he could find an Enemy to contend with him, having left the King in so ill a condition, and Sr William Waller with so good an Army waiting upon him, he had the News of the "disappointment Sr William Waller had receiv'd; "and that the King was come with his whole Army into the "West in pursuit of him, without being follow'd by Weller, or any Troops to disquiet or retard his March; which exceedingly surprised him, and made him suspect that the Parliament it felf had betrayed him, and conspir d his ruin.

THE Jealousies were now indeed grown very great between them; the Parliament looking upon his march into the West, and leaving Waller, to whom they intended the other Province, to follow the King, but as a Declaration that he would no more fight against the Person of the King; and the

Earl, on the other side, had well observed the difference betwixt the care and affection the Parliament expressed for, and towards His Army, and the other under the Command of the Earl of Manchester; which they set so great a price upon, that he thought they would not fo much care what became of His. Otherwise, it could not be possible, that upon so little a brush as Waller had fustain'd, he could not be able to follow, and difturb the King, in a Country fo enclosed, as he must pass through. In this unexpected streight, upon the first reception of the News, he refolv'd to turn back, and meet and fight with the King, either before he enter'd Devon-shire, or else in Somerset-shire; in either of which places he could not be streighten'd in room, or provisions, or be compell'd to fight in a place difadvantageous, or when he had no mind to it; and if he had pursued this Resolution, he had done prudently. But the Lord Roberts, who was a General Officer in his Army, of an infociable Nature, and impetuous Difpofition, full of contradiction in his Temper, and of Parts fo much superior to any in the Company, that he could too well maintain and justify all those contradictions, positively opposed the return of the Army; but pressed, with His confidence, "that the Army should continue it's March to Corn-"wal; where he undertook to have so great Interest, that he made no question, "but the presence of the Earl of Effex, with his Army, would fo unite that County to the Parlia-"ment's Service, that it would be easy to defend the passes in-to the whole County (which are not many) in such a man-"ner, that the King's Army should never be able to enter "into Cornwal, nor to retire out of Devon-shire without great colofs, nor before the Parliament would fend more Forces upcon their backs.

THE Lord Roberts, though inferior in the Army, had much greater credit in the Parliament than the Earl of Effex; and the Earl did not think him very kind to him, he being then in great conjunction with Sr Harry Vane, whom of all Men the Earl hated, and look'd upon as an Enemy. He had never been in Cornwal; so he knew not the Situation of the Country: fome of the Officers, and some others of that Country (as there were with him four or five Gentlemen of that Country of Interest) concurr'd fully with the Lord Roberts, and promifed great matters, if the Army marched thither: whereupon the Earl departed from his own understanding, and comply'd with their advice; and fo marched the direct way with all his Army, Horse, Foot, and Cannon, into that narrow County; and purfued Prince Maurice and those Forces, parches into which eafily retird, Westward; until he found himself in streights; where we shall leave him for the present.

The Earl of Effex Cornwal.

AFTER the King had made a small stay at Exeter, where e found his young Daughter, of whom the Queen had been lately deliver'd, under the Care and Government of the ady Dalkeith (shortly after Counters of Morton by the death f her Husband's Father) who had been long before defign'd y both their Majesty's to that Charge; and having a little reresh'd, and accommodated his Troops, he marched directly o Cornwal; where he found the Earl of Effex in fuch a part The King of the Country on the Sea fide, that he quickly, by the general follows him Conflux and Concourse of the whole People, upon which the thither. Earl had been perswaded so much to depend, found means, with very little Fighting, so to streighten his Quarters, that there feem'd little appearance that he could possibly march away with his Army, or compel the King to Fight. He was, upon the matter, inclosed in, and about Foy; whilst the King lay encamped about Liskard; and no day paffed without some Skirmishes; in which the Earl was more distressed, and many of his principal Officers taken Prisoners. Here there happen'd an Accident that might very well have turn'd the King's Fortune, and deprived him of all the Advantages which were then in view. The King being always in the Army himself, all matters were still debated before him, in the presence of those Counsellors who were about him; who, being Men of better understandings and better expressions than the Officers, commonly disposed his Majesty to Their opinions, at least kept him from concurring in every thing which was propoled by the Officers. The Counsellors, as hath been faid before, were the Lord Digby, Secretary of State, and Sr John Colepepper, Master of the Rolls, of whose judgement the King had more esteem, even with reference to the War, than of most of the Officers of the Army; which raised an implacable animosity in the whole Army against them.

GENERAL Ruthen, who by this time was Created Earl of Brentford, was General of the Army; but, as hath been faid, both by reason of his Age, and his extreme deasness, was not a Man of Counfel or Words; hardly conceiv'd what was proposed, and as confusedly and obscurely deliver'd his opinion; and could indeed better judge by his Eye than his Ear; and in the Field well knew what was to be done. Wilmot was Lieutenant General of the Horse, and at this time the second Officer of the Army, and had much more Credit and Authority in it, than any Man; which he had not employ'd to the King's advantage, as his Majesty believ'd. He was a Man Proud, and Ambitious, and incapable of being contented; an ordinary Officer in Marches, and governing his Troops. He drank hard, and had a great power over all who did fo, which was a great People. He had a more companionable Wit even than his Rival Goring, and sway'd more among the good Fellows, and could by no means endure that the Lord Digby, and Sr John Colepepper, should have so much credit with the King in Councils of War.

THE King had no kindness for him upon an old account. as remembring the part he had acted against the Earl of Strafford: however, he had been induced, upon the Accidents which happen'd afterwards, to repose trust in him. This Wilmot knew well enough; and forefaw, that he should be quickly overshadow'd in the War; and therefore defired to get out of it, by a feafonable Peace; and fo, in all his difcourses, urg'd the necessity of it, as he had begun in Buckingbam-shire; and, "that the King ought to send Propositions to "the Parliament, in order to obtaining it; and in this March had profecuted his former defign by feveral Cabals among the Officers; and disposed them to Petition the King, "to send "to the Parliament again an offer of Peace; and that the Lord "Digby, and Sr John Colepepper, might not be permitted to "be present in Councils of War; implying, "that if this " might not be granted, they would think of some other way. Which Petition, though, by the Wisdom of some Officers, it was kept from being deliver'd, yet so provoked the King, that he resolv'd to take the first opportunity to free himself from his impetuous humour; in which good disposition the Lord Digby ceased not to confirm his Majesty; and as soon as the News came of the Northern Defeat, and that the Marquis of New-Castle had left the Kingdom, he prevail'd that Goring might be fent for to attend his Majesty; who then proposed to himself to make his Nephew Prince Rupert General of the Army, and Goring General of the Horse; which Wilmot could not avowedly have excepted against, the other having been always Superior to him in Command; and yet would be fuch a Mortification to him, as he would never have been able to digeft.

WHETHER his apprehensions of this, as his jealous nature had much of sagacity in it, or his restless and mutinous humour, transported him, but he gave not the King time to prosecute that gracious method; but even forced him to a quicker and rougher remedy: for during the whole March, he discoursed, in all places, "that the King must send to the Earl of Essex to invite him to a Conjunction with him, so that the Parliament might be obliged to consent to a Peace; and pretended, that he had so good Intelligence in that Army, as to know that such an Invitation would prove effectual, and acceptable to the Earl; who, he knew, was unsatisfied with the Parliament's behaviour towards him: and he was so indiscreet, as to defire a Gentleman, with whom he had no intimacy, and who had a Pass to go beyond the Seas, nd must go through the Earl's Quarters, "that he would remember his Service to the Earl of Effex; and affure him, that the Army fo much defir'd Peace, that it should not be in the Power of any of those Persons about the King to hinder it, if his Lordship would treat upon any reasonable Propolitions. All which kind of carriage and discourses verequickly represented, in their full magnitude, to the King by the Lord Digby; and his Majesty's own aversion kindled any spark into a form'd distrust. So that after the King came into Cornwal, and had his whole Army drawn up on the top of the Hill, in view of the Earl of Effex, who was in the Bottom, and a Battle expected every day, upon some new discourse Wilmot made out of Pride and Vanity (for there was not, in all the former, the least form'd Act of Sedition in his heart) the Knight Marshal, with the affistance of Tom Elliot, arrested him in the King's Name of High Treason; and dismounted him from his Horse in the head of all the Troops; putting a Guard upon him. He was presently sent Prisoner to Exeter, without any other ill effect, which might very reafonably have been apprehended in such a conjuncture, when he was indeed generally well beloved, and none of them for whose fakes he was thought to be facrificed, were at all esteem'd: yet, I say, there were no other ill estects of it than a little murmur, which vanished away.

THE fame day that Wilmot was arrested, the King remov'd another General Officer of his Army, the Lord Piercy; who had been made General of the Ordnance upon very partial, and not enough deliberated Confiderations; and put into that Office the Lord Hopton; whose promotion was universally approv'd; the one having no friend, and the other being univerfally belov'd. Belides, the Lord Piercy (who was the first that had been created a Baron at Oxford upon the Queen's Intercession; which obliged the King to bestow the same honour on more Men) had been as much inclined to mutiny, as the Lord Wilmot; and was much a bolder Speaker, and had none of those faculties, which the other had, of reconciling Men to him. Yet even His removal added to the ill humour of the Army, too much disposed to discontent, and censuring all that was done: for though he was generally unlov'd, as a proud and supercilious Person, yet he had always three or four Persons of good credit and reputation, who were esteem'd by him, with whom he liv'd very well; and though he did not draw the good fellows to him by drinking, yet he eat well; which, in the General scarcity of that time, drew many Votaries to him; who bore very ill the want of his Table, and so were not without some inclinations to murmur even on His behalf.

THE very next day after these Removals, Colonel Goring appear'd; who had waited upon the King the night before, at his Quarters, with Letters from Prince Rupert: and then the Army being drawn up, his Majesty, attended by the principal Officers of the Army, rode to every Division of the Horse, and there declared, "that, at the request of his Ne-"phew Prince Rupert, and upon his relignation, he made Mr "Goring General of the Horie; and commanded them all to "obey him; and for the Lord Wilmot, although he had, for "very good reasons, justly restrain'd him for the present, yet "he had not taken away from him his Command in the Army; which Declaration visibly raised the countenance of the Body of Horse, more than the King was pleased with obferving: and the very next day the greatest part of the Officers deliver'd a Petition, "that his Majesty would give them so "much light of the Lord Wilmot's Crimes, that they might "fee that Themselves were not suspected, who had so long "obeyed and executed his Orders; which is manifestation enough of the ill disposition the Army was in, when they were even in view of the Enemy, and of which the King had fo much apprehension, in respect of the present posture he was in, that he was too easily perswaded to give them a Draught of the Articles, by which he was charg'd: which though they contain'd fo many Indifcretions, Vanities, and Infolencies, that wife and dispassionate Men thought he had been proceeded with very justly, yet generally they feem'd not to make him fo very black, as he had been represented to be; and when the Articles were fent to him, he return'd fo specious an Anfwer to them, that made many Men think he had been pro-fecuted with feverity enough. Yet Wilmot himself, when he faw his old mortal Enemy Goring put in the Command over him, thought himself incapable of reparation, or a full vindication; and therefore delir'd leave to retire into France; and had presently a Pass sent him to that purpose; of which he made use as soon as he received it; and so transported himself out of the Kingdom; which open'd the Mouths of many, and made it believ'd, that he had been facrificed to some Faction and Intrigue of the Court, without any fuch mildemeanour as deferv'd it.

THE King had, some days before this, found an opportunity to make a trial whether the Earl of Essex, from the notorious Indignities which he received from the Parliament, and which were visible to all the world, or from the present ill condition which He, and his Army were reduced to, might be induced to make a conjunction with his Majesty. The Lord Beauthamp, eldest Son to the Marquis of Hereford, desired, for the recovery of his health, not then good, to transport himself into France; and to that purpose had a Pass from his Uncle, the Earl of Essex, for himself; Monsieur Richante a French-Man, who had been his Governour; and two Servants, to embark at Plymouth; and being now with the King, it was necessary to pass through the Earl's Quarters. By him the King vouchsafed to write a Letter with his own hand to the Earl, in which he told him:

"How much it was in his power to restore that Peace to "the Kingdom, which he had professed always to desire; and "upon fuch conditions, as did fully comply with all those "ends for which the Parliament had first taken up Armes: "for his Majesty was still ready to satisfy all those ends; but "that fince the Invasion of the Kingdom by the Scots, all his "Overtures of Peace had been rejected; which must prove "the destruction of the Kingdom, if he did not, with his Au-"thority and Power, dispose those at Westminster to accept of a Peace that might preserve it; with all those Arguments, that might most reasonably perswade to a conjunction with his Majesty, and such gracious expressions of the sense he would always retain of the Service and Merit, as were most likely to invite him to it. The King desir'd, that a Pass might be procured for Mr Harding, one of the Grooms of the Bed-Chamber to the Prince, a Gentleman, who had been before of much conversation with the Earl, and much lov'd by him; and the procuring this Pass was recommended to Monsieur Richaute.

THE Earl receiv'd his Nephew very kindly; who deliver'd the King's Letter to him, which he receiv'd, and read; and being then told by the Lord Beauchamp, that Monfieur Richaute, who was very well known to him, had fomewhat to fay to him from the King; the Earl called him into his Chamber, in the presence only of the Lord Beauchamp, and ask d'him, "if he had any thing to fay to him? Richaute told him, "that his principal business was to desire his Permission "and Pass, that Mr Harding might come to him, who had "many things to offer, which, he prefumed, would not be unacceptable to him. The Earl Answerd in fliort, "that he "would not permit Mr Harding to come to him, nor would "he have any Treaty with the King, having received no War-" rant for it from the Parliament: upon which, Richaute enlarged himself upon some particulars, which Mr Harding was to have urg'd, "of the King's defire of Peace, of the con-"currence of all the Lords, as well those at Oxford, as in the Army, in the same delire of preserving the Kingdom from "a Conquest by the Scots; and other discourse to that purpose; "and of the King's readiness to give him any security for the performance of all he had promifed. To all which the Ll 2

Earl Answer'd fullenly, "that according to the Commission "he had receiv'd, he would defend the King's Person, and "Posterity; and that the best Counsel he could give him was,

"to go to his Parliament.

Assoon as the King receiv'd this Account of his Letter, and faw there was nothing to be expected by those Addresses, he refolv'd to push it on the other way, and to Fight with the Enemy as foon as was possible; and so the next day, drew up all his Army in fight of the Enemy; and had many Skirmishes between the Horse of both Armies, till the Enemy quitted that part of a large Heath upon which they stood, and retired to a Hill near the Park of the Lord Mohum, at Boconmocke; they having the possession of his House, where they That Night both Armies, after they Quarter'd conveniently. had well view'd each other, lay in the Field; and many are of opinion, that if the King had that day vigorously advanced upon the Enemy, to which his Army was well inclined, though upon some disadvantage of ground, they would have been eafily defeated: for the King's Army was good in heart, and willing to engage; on the contrary, the Earl's feem'd much furprifed, and in confusion, to see the other Army so near them. But fuch censures always attend such Conjun-Ctures, and find fault for what is Not done, as well as with that which is done.

THE next Morning the King called a Council, to confider whether they should that day compel the Enemy to Fight; which was concluded not to be reasonable; and that it was better to expect the arrival of Sr Richard Greenvil; who was yet in the West of Cornwal, and had a Body of eight thousand Horse and Foot, as was reported, though they were not near that number. It was hereupon order'd, that all the Foot should be presently drawn into the Inclosures between Boconnocke and the Heath; all the Fences to the Grounds of that Country being very good Breast-works against the Enemy. The King's head Quarter was made at the Lord Mohun's House, which the Earl of Essex had kindly quitted, when the King's Army advanced the day before. The Horse were Quarter'd, for the most part, between Liskard and the Sea; and, every day, compell'd the Earl's Forces to retire, and to lodge close together; and in this posture both Armies lay within view of each other for three or four days. In this time, that inconvenient Spirit that had possessed so many of the Horse Officers, appear'd again; and some of them, who had conferr'd with the Prisoners, who were every day taken, and fome of them Officers of as good Quality as any they had, were perswaded by them, "that all the obstinacy in Es-" fex, in refusing to treat with the King, proceeded only from his jealousy that when the King had got him into his hands, he would take revenge upon him, for all the mischief he had sustain'd by him; and that, if he had any assurance that what was promised would be complied with, he would be quickly induced to treat.

UPON this excellent Evidence, these Politick Contrivers prefum'd to prepare a Letter, that should be subscribed by the General, and all the Superior Officers of the Army; the beginning of which Letter was, "that they had obtain'd leave of the King to fend that Letter to him. There they proposed, "that He with fix Officers, whom he should choose, would the next Morning meet with their General, and fix cother Officers, as should be appointed to attend him; and "if he would not himself be present, that then fix Officers of "the King's Army should meet with fix such as He should "appoint, at any place that should be thought fit; and that "they, and every of them, who subscribed the Letter, would, "upon the honour and reputation of Gentlemen and Soldiers, "with their Lives maintain that what soever his Majesty should "promise, should be perform'd; and that it should not be in "the power of any Private Person whatsoever, to interrupt "or hinder the execution thereof. When they had framed this Letter between themselves, and shew'd it to many others, whose approbation they received, they resolved to present it to the King, and humbly to defire his permission that it might be fent to the Earl of Effex.

How unpardonable foever the prefumption and infolence in contriving and framing this Letter was, and how penal foever it might justly have been to them, yet, when it was prefented to his Majesty, many who liked not the manner of it, were perswaded by what they were told, that it might do good; and in the end they prevailed with the King to confent that the Officers should fign it; and that the General thould fend a Trumpet with it; his Majesty at the same time concluding, that it would find no better reception than his own Letter had done; and likewife believing, that the rejecting of it would purge that unruly Spirit out of his Army, and that he should never more be troubled with those vexatious Addresses, and that it might add some Spirit and Animonty to the Officers and Soldiers, when they should see, with how much neglect and contempt the Earl received their application: And so Prince Maurice, General Goring, and all the Superior Officers of the Army, fign'd the Letter; which a Trumpet delivered to the Earl of Effect; who, the next day, return'd his Answer to them in these words: "My Lords, in "the beginning of your Letter you express by what Autho-"rity you fend it; I having no Authority from the Parliament,

"who have employ'd me, to treat, cannot give way to it without breach of trust. My Lords, I am your humble Ser"vant, Essex, Listitude Aug. 10. 1644. This short surly Answer, produced the Essect the King wish'd and expected; they who had been so over-active in contriving the Address, were most assumed of their folly; and the whole Army seem'd well composed to obtain that by their Swords, which they

SIR Richard Greenvil was now come up to the Post where he should be; and, at Bodmin, in his March, had fallen upon a Party of the Earl's Horse, and kill'd many, and taken others Prisoners, and presented himself to the King at Boconnocke; giving his Majesty an account of his proceedings, and a particular of his Forces; which, after all the high discourses, amounted really but to eighteen hundred Foot, and six hundred Horse; above one hundred of which were of the Queen's Troop (lest behind when her Majesty Embark'd for France) under the Command of Captain Edward Bret; who had done very good Service in the Western Parts of that County, from the time of the Queen's departure, and much confirm'd the Train'd-bands of those parts. This Troop was presently added to the King's Guards under the Lord Bernard Stuart, and

Captain Bret was made Major of that Regiment.

THOUGH the Earl of Effex had but streight and narrow room for his Quarters for fo great an Army of Horse and Foot, yet he had the good Town of Foy and the Sea to friend; by which he might reasonably assure himself of store of Provisions, the Parliament Ships having all the jurisdiction there; and fo, if he preferv'd his Post, which was so situated that he could not be compelled to Fight without giving him great advantage, he might well conclude, that Waller, or fome other force fent from the Parliament, would be shortly upon the King's back, as his Majesty was upon His: and no question, this rational Confidence was a great motive to him to neglect all Overtures made to him by the King; belides the punctuality and stubborness of his own Nature; which whofoever was well accuainted with, might eafily have foreseen, what effect all those applications would have produced. It was therefore now refolv'd to make his Quarters yet streighter, and to cut off even his Provisions by Sea, or a good part thereof. To which purpose St Richard Greenvil drew his Men from Bodmin, and possessed himself of Lanbetherick, a strong House of the Lord Roberts, two Miles West of Boconnocke, and over the River that runs to Listitbiel, and thence to Foy, and likewise to Reprime Bridge; by which the Enemy was not only depriv'd of that useful out-let, but a fafe Communication made between him and the King's Army, which was er-pefore interrupted. And on the other fide, which was of more Importance, Sr Jacob Aftley, with a good Party of Horse ind Foot, made himself Master of View-Hall, another House of the Lord Mohun's, over against Foy, and of Pernon Fort, Mile below it, at the Mouth of the Haven; both which places he found so tenable, that he put Captain Page into one, and Captain Garraway into the other, with two hundred Commanded Men, and two or three pieces of Ordnance; which these two Captains made good, and defended so well, that they made Foy utterly useless to Esfex, save for the Quartering his Men; not suffering any Provisions to be brought in to him from the Sea that way. And it was exceedingly wonder'd at by all Men, that he, being fo long poffess'd of Fay, did not put strong Guards into those places; by which he might have prevented his Army's being brought into those extreme necessities they shortly after fell into; which might eafily be foreseen, and as easily, that way, have been prevented.

Now the King had leifure to fit still, and warily to expect what invention or stratagem the Earl would make use of, to make some attempt upon his Army, or to make his own Escape. In this posture both Armies lay still, without any notable Action, for the space of eight or ten days; when the King feeing no better fruit from all that was hitherto done, refolv'd to draw his whole Army together, and to make his own Quarters yet much nearer, and either to force Effect to Fight, or to be unearly even in his Quarters. And it was high time to do fo: for it was now certain, that either Waller himself, or some other Forces, were already upon their March towards the West. With this Resolution the whole Army advanced in fuch a manner, that the Enemy was compell'd still to retire before them, and to quit their Quarters; and, among the rest, a rising ground called Beacon-Hill; which they no fooner quitted, than the King possessed; and immediately caused a square work to be there raised, and a Battery made, upon which some pieces of Cannon were planted, that shot into their Quarters, and did them great hurt; when their Cannon, though they return'd twenty shot for one, did very little or no harm.

AND now the King's Forces had a full prospect over all the others Quarters; saw how all their Foot and Horse were disposed, and from whence they receiv'd all their Forage and Provisions; which when clearly view'd and observ'd, Goring was sent with the greatest part of the Horse, and sisteen hundred Foot, a little Westward to St Blase, to drive the Enemy yet closer together, and cut off the Provisions they receiv'd from thence; which was so well executed, that they did not only possess themselves of St Austel, and the Westerly part of St Blafe (fo that the Enemies Horse was reduced to that small extent of Earth that is between the River of Foy, and that at Blase, which is not above two Miles in breadth, and little more in length; in which they had for the most part fed fince they came to Listibiel, and therefore it could not now long supply them) but likewise were Masters of the Parr near St Blase; whereby they deprived them of the chief place of Landing the Provisions which came by Sea. And now the Earl begun to be very fensible of the ill Condition he was in. and discern'd that he should not be able long to remain in that posture; besides, he had receiv'd advertisement that the Party which was fent for his Relief from London, had receiv'd fome brush in Somerset-shire, which would much retard their March; and therefore it behov'd him to enter upon new Counsels, and to take new Resolutions.

IT is very true the Defeat at Cropredy (in which there did not appear to be one thousand Men kill'd, or taken Prifoners) had so totally broken Waller's Army, that it could never be brought to Fight after; but when he had march'd at a distance from the King, to recover the broken Spirits of his Men, and heard that his Majesty was march'd directly towards the West, observing likewise that every Night very many of his Men run from him, he thought it necessary to go himself to London, where he made grievous complaints against the Earl of Essex, as if he had purposely exposed him to be affronted; all which was greedily hearken'd to, and his Person receiv'd, and treated, as if he had return'd Victorious after having Defeated the King's Army: which was a method very contrary to what was used in the King's Quarters, where all accidental Missortunes, how inevitable soever, were still attended with very apparent discountenance.

Bur when he went himself to London, or presently upon it, he fent his Lieutenant General Middleton (a Person of whom We shall fay much hereafter, and who liv'd to wipe out the Memory of the ill foot-steps of his Youth; for he was but eighteen years of Age, when he was first led into Rebellion) with a Body of three thousand Horse and Dragoons, to follow the King into the West, and to wait upon his Rear, with Orders to reduce in his way Donnington Castle, the House of a private Gentleman near Newbury, in which there were a Company or two of Foot of the King's; and which they believ'd would be deliver'd up, affoon as demanded; being a place, as They thought, of little strength. But Middleton found it so well defended by Colonel Bois, who was Governour of it, that after he had lost at least three hundred Officers and Soldiers, in attempting to take it, he was compell'd ompell'd to recommend it to the Governour of Abingdon, to end an Officer and some Troops to block it up from infelting hat great Road into the West; and himself prosecuted his larch to follow the King.

IN Somer set Shire, he heard of great Magazines of all Proifions, made for the fupply of the King's Army, which were ent every day by strong Convoys to Exeter, there to wait arther Orders. To furprise these Provisions he sent Major carr, with five hundred Horse; who fell into the Village where the Convoy was, and was very like to have Mafter d them, when Sr Francis Doddington, with a Troop of Horse, and some Foot from Bridgewater, came seasonably to their Relief; and after a very sharp Conflict, in which two or three good Officers of the King's were kill'd, and, among them, Major Killigren, a very hopeful young Man, the Son of a Gallant and most deserving Father, he totally Routed the Enemy; kill'd thirty or forty upon the place; and had the pursuit of them two or three Miles; in which Major Carr, who Commanded the Party, and many other Officers, were taken; and many others desperately wounded; and recover'd all that they had taken: which tharp Encounters, where always many more Men are loft, than are kill'd, or taken Prifoners, put such a stop to Middleton's March, that he was glad to retire back to Sherborne, that he might refresh the weariness, and recover the Spirits of his Men. This was the Defeat or Obstruction, which the Earl of Effex had Intelligence that the Forces had met with coming to his Relief; and which made him despair of any Succour that way.

WHEN the Earl found himself in this Condition, and that, within very few days, he must be without any Provisions for his Army; he refolv'd, that S. William Balfour should use his utmost endeavour to break through with his whole Body of Horse, and to save them the best he could; and then that he himself would Embark his Foot at Fay, and with them escape by Sea. And two Foot Soldiers of the Army, whereof one was a French-man, came over from them, and altured the King, "that they intended, that Night, to break through "with their Horse, which were all then drawn on that side "the River, and Town of Listithiel; and that the Foot were "to march to Foy, where they should be Embarked. This Intelligence agreed with what they otherwise received, and was believed as it ought to be; and thereupon, order was given, "that both Armies (for that under Prince Maurice was look'd upon as distinct, and always so Quarter'd) " should stand to their Armes all that Night; and if the Horic "attempted an escape, fall on them from both Quarters; the pallage between them, through which they must go, being but a Musquet-shot over; and they could not avoid going very near a very little Cottage, that was well Fortified; in which fifty Mulqueteers were placed. Advertisement was fent to Goring, and all the Horse; and the Orders renew'd, which had formerly been given, for the breaking down the Bridges, and cutting down the Trees near the high-way, to obstruct their passage.

Balfour of Effex's

THE effect of all this Providence was not fuch as was with the Earl reasonably to be expected. The Night grew dark and misty, as the Enemy could wish; and about three in the Morning, through the the whole Body of the Horse passed with great silence between King's Ar- the Armies, and within Pistol-shot of the Cottage, without to much as one Musquet discharg'd at them. At the break of Day, the Horse were discover'd marching over the Heath, beyond the reach of the Foot; and there was only at hand the Earl of cleveland's Brigade, the Body of the King's Horse being at a greater distance. That Brigade, to which some other Troops which had taken the Alarm joyn'd, follow'd them in the Rear; and kill'd some, and took more Prisoners: But stronger Parties of the Enemy frequently turning upon them, and the whole Body often making a fland, they were often compell'd to retire; yet follow'd in that manner, that they kill'd and took about a hundred; which was the greatest damage they fustain'd in their whole March. The Notice and Orders came to Goring, when he was in one of his jovial Exercises; which he receiv'd with mirth, and slighting those who lent them, as Men who took Alarms too warmly; and he continued his delights, till all the Enemies Horse were passed through his Quarters; nor did then pursue them in any time. So that, excepting fuch who, by the tiring of their Horses, became Prisoners, Balfour continued his March even to London, with less loss or trouble than can be imagin'd, to the infinite Reproach of the King's Army, and of all his Garrisons in the way. Nor was any Man called in eucltion for this supine neglect; it being not thought fit to make fevere inquifition into the behaviour of the rett, when it was so notoriously known, how the Superior Officer had failed in his duty, a none the draw union, a note proper only

THE next Morning, after the Horse were gone, the Earl drew all his Foot together, and quitted Listibiel, and march'd towards Foy; having left order for the breaking down that Bridge. But his Majesty himself from his new Fort discern'd it, and fent a Company of Mulqueteers, who quickly beat those that were left; and thereby preserved the Bridge; over which the King presently march'd to overtake the Rear of the Army, which march'd fo fast, yet in good Order, that they left two Demy-Culverins, and two other very good Guns,

THE King confented to the Parley; upon which a Ceffa-Skippon tion was concluded; and Hoftages interchangeably deliver'd; makes Conand then the Enemy fent Propositions, such as upon delivery the Foot. of a strong fortified Town, after a handsome detence are usually granted at But they quickly found they were not look'd upon as Men in that Condition; and so, in the end, they were. contented to deliver up all their Cannon; which, with the four taken two or three days before, were eight and thirty pieces of Cannon; a hundred Barrels of Powder, with Match and Bullets proportionable; and about fix thousand Armes; which being done. This Agreement was executed accordingly, on Monday the fecond of September, and though it was near the Evening before all was innish'd, they would march away that Night; and though all care was taken to preserve them from Violence, yet first at Listibies, where they had been long Quarter'd, and in other Towns through which they had formerly passed, the Inhabitants, especially the Women, who pretended to see their own Cloaths and Goods about them, which they had been plunder'd of, treated them very rudely, even to stripping of some of the Soldiers, and more of their Wives, who had before behaved themselves with great Insolence in the march. That Night there came about one hundred of them to the King's Army, and of the fix thousand, for so many march'd out of Foy, there did not a third part come to Southampton; where the King's Convoy left them; to which Skippon gave a large Testimony under his hand, "that they had carried themselves with great Civility towards them, "and fully complied with their obligation.

Affairs at Oxford during the King's ab-

WHILST the King was in the West, though he had left Oxford in a very ill State in respect of Provisions and Fortifications, and Soldiers, and of the different humours of those who remain d there, the Town being full of Lords (belides those of the Council) and of Persons of the best Quality, with very many Ladies, who, when not pleased themselves, kept others from being fo; yet, in his absence, they who were follicitous to carry on his Service, concurr'd and agreed fo well together, that they prevailed with the rest to do every thing that was necessary. They caused Provisions of Corn to be laid in, in great proportions; affigning the Publick Schools to that purpole; and committing the Custody of them to the owners of the Corn. They had raifed fo many Voluntiers, that their Guards were well kept, and there was need they thould be fo; for when both the Parliament Armies were before the Town, Major General Brown, a Citizen of London of good Reputation, and a stout Man, had been left in Abingdon with a strong Garrison; from whence, being superior in number, he infelted Oxford very much, which gave them the more reason to prosecute the Fortifications; which, in the most important places, they brought to a good perfection; and when they had no more apprehension of a Siege, Waller being at a distance, and not able to follow the King, and less able to fit down before Oxford, they resolv'd to do somewhat to be talked of.

THE King had, before his departure, found they were not fatisfied with their Governour, and very apprehensive of his Rudeness, and want of Complacency. Upon the death of Sw William Penniman, who had been Governour of Oxford, to the great satisfaction of all Men, being a very brave and generous Person, and who perform'd all manner of Civilities to all forts of People, as having had a good Education, and well understanding the manners of the Court (the Queen being then in Oxford) her Majesty, who thought her self the safer for being under the charge, and care of a Roman Catholick, olick, prevailed with the King, to confer that charge upon Arthur Afton; who had been at Reading, and had the forhe to be very much esteem'd, where he was Not known; I very much dilliked, where he was; and he was by this he too well known at Oxford, to be belov'd by any; which King well understood, and was the more troubled, bense he saw the prejudice was universal, and with too much ason; and therefore his Majesty had given an extraordinary ommission to the Lords of his Council, to whose Authority was to submit, which obliged him to live with a little more spect towards them, than he defired to do; being a Man of rough Nature, and lo given up to an immoderate love of Money, that he cared not by what unrighteous ways he excted it. There were likewise some officers of Name, who, aving then no charge in the Army, staid in the Town; and hose, by the King's direction, the Lords disposed to assist he Governour; and particularly, to take care of the feveral quarters of the Town; one whereof was allign'd to each of hem: among them, Colonel Gage was one; who having the English Regiment in Flanders, had got leave there to make offer of his Service to the King; and to that purpose was newly come from thence to Oxford.

HE was in truth a very extraordinary Man, of a large and very graceful Person, of an Honourable extraction, his Grandfather having been Knight of the Garter; belides his great experience and abilities as a Soldier, which were very eminent, he had very great parts of breeding, being a very good Schoar in the polite parts of Learning, a great Master in the Spaish and Italian Tongues, besides the French and the Dutch, which he spoke in great perfection; having scarce been in England in twenty years before. He was likewise very converlant in Courts; having for many years been much elteem'd in that of the Arch-Duke and Dutchess, Albert and Isabella, at Bruffels; which was a great and very regular Court at that time; so that he deserved to be look'd upon as a wise and accomplish'd Person. Of this Gentleman, the Lords of the Council had a fingular effeem, and consulted frequently with him, whilst they look'd to be Besieged; and thought Oxford to be the more secure for His being in it; which render'd him to ungrateful to the Governour, Sr Arthur, that he croffed him in any thing he proposed, and hated him perfectly; as they were of Natures, and Manners, as different as Men can Suffex, under the Command of Norton, Onflow, Farvis, Whitehead, and Morley, all Colonels of Regiments, and now united in this Service under the Command of Norton; a Man of Spirit, and of the greatest Fortune of all the rest. It was so closely begirt before the King's March into the West, and was look'd upon as a place of fuch importance, that when the King fent notice to Oxford of his resolution to march into the West, the Council humbly defired his Majesty, " that he would make Basing his way, and thereby relieve it, which his Majesty found would have retarded his march too much, and might have invited Waller the sooner to follow him; and therefore declin'd it. From that time, the Marquis, by frequent expresses, importuned the Lords of the Council a to provide, in some manner, for his relief; and not to suffer his Person, and a place from whence the Rebels receiv'd so much prejudice, to fall into their hands. The Lady Marchioness, his Wife, was then in Oxford; and sollicited very diligently the timely prefervation of her Husband; which made every body defire to gratify her, being a Lady of great Honour and Alliance, as Sifter to the Earl of Effex, and to the Lady Marchioness of Hertford; who was likewise in the Town, and engaged her Husband to take this business to heart: and all the Roman Catholicks, who were numerous in the Town, look'd upon themselves as concern'd to contribute all they could to the good work, and so offer'd to list themselves, and their Servants in the Service.

THE Council, both upon publick and private motives, was very heartily disposed to effect it; and had several conferences together, and with the Officers; in all which the Governour too reasonably opposed the design, "as full of more "difficulties, and liable to greater damages, than any Soldier "who understood Command, would expose himself and the "King's Service to; and protested, "that he would not sufefer any of the small Garrison that was under his charge, to be hazarded in the attempt. It was very true, Basing was near forty Miles from Oxford, and, in the way between them, the Enemy had a strong Garrison of Horse and Foot at Abingdon, and as fitting at Reading. whose Horse every day visited all the High-ways near, befides a Body of Horse and Dragoons Quarter'd at Newbury; fo that it appear'd to most Men hardly possible to send a Party to Basing, and impossible for that Party to return to Oxford, if they should be able to get to Basing: yet new importunities from the Marquis, with a positive Declaration, "that he could not defend it above ten adays, and must then submit to the worst conditions the Re-"bels were like to grant to his Person, and to his Religion; and new instances from his Lady, prevailed with the Lords to enter upon a new consultation; in which the Governour persisted in his old resolution, as seeing no cause to change it.

In this Debate Colonel Gage declared, "that though he thought the Service full of hazard, especially for the return; yet if the Lords would, by listing their own Servants, per"fwade the Gentlemen in the Town to do the like, and en"gage their own Persons, whereby a good Troop or two of "Horse might be raised (upon which the principal depen"dence must be) he would willingly, if there were no body
"else thought fitter for it, undertake the conduct of them him"self; and hoped he should give a good account of it: which being offer'd with great chearfulness by a Person, of whose Prudence, as well as Courage, they had a full considence, they all resolv'd to do the utmost that was in their power to make it effectual.

THERE was about this time, by the furrender of Greenland-House (which could not possibly be longer defended, the whole structure being beaten down by the Cannon) the Regiment of Colonel Hawkins march'd into Oxford, amounting to near three Hundred; to which as many others joyn'd as made it up four hundred Men. The Lords mounted their Servants upon their own Horses; and they, with the Voluntiers, who frankly lifted themselves, amounted to a Body of two hundred and fifty very good Horse, all put under the Command of Colonel William Web, an excellent Officer, bred up in Flanders in some emulation with Colonel Gage; and who, upon the Catholick Interest, was at this time contented to ferve under him. With this small Party for so great an Action, Gage marched out of Oxford in the beginning of the Night; and, by the Morning, reached the place where he intended to refresh himself and his Troops; which was a Wood near Wallingford; from whence he dispatched an Express to Sr William Ogle, Governour of Winchester; who had made a promise to the Lords of the Council, "that, whenso-"ever they would endeavour the raising of the Siege before "Bafing, he would fend one hundred Horse, and three hun-"dred Foot out of the Garrison for their Assistance; and a prelumption upon this aid, was the principal motive for the undertaking and so he was directed, at What hour in the Morning his Party should fall into Bafing Park, in the Rear of the Rebells Quarters; whilft Gage himself would fall on the other fide; the Marquis being defir'd at the fame time to make frequent Sallies from the House.

AFTER fome hours of refreshment in the Morning, and fending this Express to Winchester, the Troops marched through by-Lanes to Aldermaston, a Village out of any great road; where they intended to take more rest that Night.

They had marched, from the time they left Oxford, with Orange-Tawny Scarfs and Ribbans, that they might be taken for the Parliament Soldiers; and hoped, by that Artifice, to have passed undiscover'd even to the approach upon the Besiegers. But the Party of Horse which was sent before to Aldermasson, found there some of the Parliament Horse, and forgetting their Orange-Tawny Scarfs, fell upon them; and killed some, and took six or seven Prisoners; whereby the secret was discover'd, and notice quickly sent to Basing of the approaching danger; which accident made their stay shorter at that Village than was intended, and than the weariness of the Soldiers required. About eleven of the Clock, they begun their march again; which they continued all that Night; the Horsemen often alighting, that the Foot might ride, and others taking many of them behind them; however they could not but be extremely weary, and furbated.

BETWEEN four and five of the Clock on Wednesday Morning, it having been Monday Night that they left Oxford, they arriv'd within a Mile of Basing; where an Officer, sent from Sr William Ogle, came to them to let them know, "that "he durst not send his Troops so far, in regard many of the "Enemies Horse lay between Winchester and Basing. This broke all the Colonels measures; and, since there was no receding, made him change the whole Method of his proceedings; and instead of dividing his Forces, and falling on in feveral places, as he meant to have done if the Winchester Forces had comply'd with their obligation, or if his march had been undiscover'd, he resolv'd now to fall on joyntly with all his Body in one place; in order to which, he commanded the Men to be ranged in Battalions; and rid to every Squadron, giving them such words as were proper to the occasion; which no man could more pertinently deliver, or with a better grace: he commanded every Man to tye a white Tape Ribban, or Handkerchief above the Elbow of their right Arme; and gave them the word St George; which was the fign and the word that he had fent before to the Marquis, left, in his Sallies their Men, for want of distinction, might fall foul of each other.

Thus they marched towards the House, Colonel Web leading the right Wing, and Lieutenant Colonel Bunkley the left of the Horse; and Gage himself the Foot: they had not marched far, when at the upper End of a large Campagne Field, upon a little rising of an Hill, they discern'd a Body of five Cornets of Horse very full, standing in very good order to receive them. But before any impression could be made upon them, the Colonel must pass between two Hedges lin'd very thick with Musqueteers; from whom the Horse

very Couragiously bore a finant Volly, and then Charged the Enemies Horse so gallantly, that, after a shorter relistance than was expected from the known Courage of Norton. though many of his Men fell, they gave ground; and at last plainly run to a fafe place, beyond which they could not be pursued. The Foot disputed the business much better; and being beaten from Hedge to Hedge, retired into their Quarters and Works; which they did not abandon in less than two hours; and then a free entrance into the House was gain'd on that fide, where the Colonel only stay'd to falute the Marquis, and to put in the Ammunition he had brought with him; which was only twelve Barrels of Powder, and twelve hundred weight of Match; and immediately marched with his Horse and Foot to Basing-stoke, a good Market Town two Miles from the House; leaving one hundred Foot to be led, by some Officers of the Garrison, to the Town of Bafing, a Village but a Mile distant. In Bafing-stoke, they found store of Wheat, Mault, Oats, Salt, Bacon, Cheese, and Butter; as much of which, was all that day fent to the House; as they could find Carts or Horses to transport, together with fourteen Barrels of Powder, and some Musquets, and forty or fifty head of Cattle, with above one hundred Sheep: whilst the other Party, that went to Bafing-Town, beat the Enemy that was Quarter'd there, after having kill'd forty or fifty of them; some fled into the Church, where they were quickly taken Prisoners; and, among them, two Captains, Famuife and Tephfon, the two eldest Sons of two of the greateft Rebels of that Country, and both Heirs to good Fortunes, who were carried Prisoners to Basing-House; the rest, who Befieged that fide, being fled into a strong Fort which they had raised in the Park. The Colonel spent that, and the next day, in fending all manner of Provisions into the House; and then reasonably computing that the Garrison was well provided for two Months, he thought of his retreat to Oxford; which it was time to do: for belides that Norton had drawn all his Men together, who had been dismayed, with all the Troops, which lay Quarter'd within any distance, and appear'd within fight of the Houle more numerous and gay than before, as if he meant to be revenged before they parted, he was likewife well inform d by the Persons he had employed. that the Enemy from Abingdon had lodged themselves at Aldermafton, and those from Reading and Newbury, in two other Villages upon the River Kennet; over which he was to pais: HEREUPON, that he might take away the Apprehension

HEREUPON, that he might take away the Apprehension that he meant suddainly to depart, he sent out Orders, which he was sure would come into the Enemies hands; to two of three Villages next the House, "that they should, by the next

"day-noon, fend fuch proportions of Corn into Bafing-House, "as were mention'd in the Warrants; upon pain, if they " failed by the time, to have a thousand Horse and Dragoons "fent to fire the Towns. This being done, and all his Men drawn together about eleven of the Clock at Night, Thursday the fecond Night after he came thither, the Marquis giving him two or three Guides who knew the Country exactly, he marched from Basing without sound of Drum or Trumpet, and passed the Kennet, undiscover'd, by a Ford near a Bridge which the Enemy had broke down; and thereby thought they had secured that passage; the Horse taking the Foot en Croup; and then, marching by-ways, in the Morning they likewife passed over the Thames, at a Ford little more than a Mile from Reading; and so escaped the Enemy, and got before Night to Wallingford; where he securely rested, and refreshed his Men that Night; and the next Day arriv'd fafe at Oxford; having lost only two Captains, and two or three other Gentlemen, and Common Men; in all to the number of eleven; and forty or fifty wounded, but not dangerously: what number the Enemy lost could not be known; but it was believ'd, they lost many, belides above one hundred Prisoners that were taken; and it was confess'd by Enemies as well as Friends, that it was as Soldierly an Action, as had been perform'd in the War on either fide; and redounded very much to the reputation of the Commander.

THE next day after the Army of Effex was gone, and diffolv'd, the King return'd to his Quarters at Beconnoke, and flay'd there only a day to refresh his Men; having fent, the day before, Greenvil, with the Cornell Horse and Foot, towards Plymouth, to joyn with Goring in the pursuit of Balfour, and that Body of Horse; which, by passing over the Bridge near Salt-alb, they might easily have done. But he flacken'd his march that he might possess Sait ash, which the Enemy had quitted, and left therein eleven pieces of Cannon with fome Armes and Ammunition; which, together with the Town, was not worth his unwarrantable stay. This kept him from joyning with Goring; who thereby, and for want of those Foot, excused his not Fighting with Balfour when he was within distance; but contented himself with sending a Commanded Party to follow his Rear, and in that too cagera purfuit, Captain Sam. Wainman, a young Man of extraordinary parts and expectation, the Son of a very wife and eminent Father, was loft, to the irreparable damage of a Noble Family. Thus Balfour, by an orderly and well govern'd march, pass'd above one hundred Miles in the King's Quarters, as hath been faid before without any confiderable loss, to a place of fafery

THE fear and apprehension of the Enemy was no sooner over, than the murmur begun, "that the King had been per-" fwaded to grant too good conditions to that Body of Foot; "and that he might well have forced them to have submitted "to his mercy, as well as to have laid down their Armes; "and fo have made both Officers and Soldiers to become Pri-"foners of War: by which the Enemy would not have been "able to foon to have raifed another Army. But they who undertook to censure that Action, how great a Number soever they were, did not at all understand the present temper and constitution of the King's Army; which then was not near fo strong as it was reputed to be: whatever it might have done by a brisk and vigorous attempt, when it first enter'd Cornwal, which was in the beginning of August, and when a Party of his Majesty's Horse surprised and seiled the Earl of Effex's own Lieutenant Colonel, and many other Officers of Name at Boconnocke, before his Majesty was suspected to be in any near diffance: I fay whatever might have been then done, in that consternation the Enemy was then in, the case was very much alter'd in the beginning of September, when the Articles were made; and when the number of the Foot who laid down their Armes, was in truth superior to those of the King's (as it will appear anon) when his Army marched out of cornwal. The overlight, which was a great one, was on the other fide, when their Horse broke through. If they had then known, and it was hardly possible they should not know it, that all the King's Horfe, his Guard only excepted. were at that time Quarter'd behind them, about St Blafe, their Foot might very well have march'd away with their Horse, their Cannon only being left behind, and having got but four or five hours before, which they might eafily, and as undifcern'd have done, the King's Army in the Condition and state it was in, naked and unfhod, would through those inclosed parts, narrow Lanes, and deep Ditches, in Devon and Somerlet, have been able to have done them little harm: Befides the King very well knew at the time the Articles were made, that Middleton, notwithstanding all his Affronts, was then come to Truerton; and therefore there can be no doubt, that his Majefty, in those condescensions, proceeded with no less Prudence than Clemency.

AFTER this great Success, the King thought fit to renew The King his offer of Peace; and sent a Message to the two Houses of sends a Message real parliament, to desire that there might be a Treaty to that pur-sage of pose; which Message was sent by a Trumpet to the Earl of Peace.

Essex, after his repair to London, to be deliver'd by him, of which there was no consideration taken in three Months after the receipt of it. This done, the King was perfwaded, in his M m 2 way way (as it was not much out of it) to look upon Plymouth; for fo far it might be presumed that the Cornish Troops, how impatient soever they were to be at their harvest, would attend him: And if he could, by appearing before it, become Master of it, which was not thought improbable, he might return to Oxford in great Triumph, and leave the West throughly reduced: for then Lyme could not hold out, and he might be sure to carry an Army with him strongly recruited; but if it proved not a work of ease and expedition, he might proceed in his march without farther stay; and he quickly found it necessary to do so; having sent a Summons to the Town, and receiv'd a rude Answer to it :

FOR the Earl of Effex had left the Lord Roberts Governour in the Town; a Man of a four and furly Nature, a great Opiniatre, and one who must be overcome before he would believe that he could be fo. The King, finding no good could be done with him, and that the reducing the Town would require some time, pursued his former Resolution, and marched away; having committed the Blocking up of Plymouth to Sr Richard Greenvil, a Man who had been bred a Soldier, and of great expectation, but of greater promises; having with all manner of Assurance undertaken to take the Town by christmas, if such Conditions might be perform'd to him, all which were punctually comply'd with; whilft he made his Quarters as far as ever they had been formerly from the Town; beginning his War first upon his Wife, who had been long in possession of her own Fortune, by virtue of a Decree in Chancery, many years before the Troubles; and feifing upon all the had, and then making himself Master of all Their Estates who were in the Service of the Parliament. without doing any thing of importance upon the Town; only upon the first Message between the Lord Roberts and Him, there arose so mortal a misunderstanding, that there was never Civility or Quarter observ'd between them; but fuch as were taken on either fide, were put to the Sword; or which was worfe, to the Halter.

SINCE there will be often occasion to mention this Gentleman, St Richard Greenvil, in the ensuing discourse, and because many Men believ'd, that he was hardly dealt with in the next year, where all the proceedings will be set down at large, it will not be unsit, in this place, to say somewhat of him, and of the manner and merit of his entring into the King's Service some Months before the time We are now upon. He was of a very ancient and worthy Family in Cornwal, which had, in several Ages, produced Men of great Courage, and very signal in their Fidelity to, and Service of the Crown; and was Himself younger Brother (though in his Nature, or Humour, not of Kin to him) to the brave Sr Bevil Greenvil. who fo Couragiously lost his Life in the Battle of Lansdown. Being a younger Brother, and a very young Man, he went into the Low Countries to learn the Profession of a Soldier; to which he had dedicated himself under the greatest General of that Age, Prince Maurice, in the Regiment of my Lord Veere, who was General of all the English. In that Service he was look'd upon as a Man of Courage, and a diligent Officer, in the quality of a Captain, to which he attain'd after few years Service. About this time, in the end of the Reign of King James, the War broke out between England and Spain; and in the Expedition to Cales, this Gentleman serv'd as a Major to a Regiment of Foot, and continued in the same Command, in the War that foon after follow'd against France; and, at the Isle of Rhee, infinuated himself into the very good grace of the Duke of Buckingham, who was the General in that Invasion; and after the unfortunate retreat from thence, was made Colonel of a Regiment with general Approbation, and as an Officer that well deferv'd it.

Humour,

His Credit every day encreased with the Duke; who, out of the generofity of his Nature, as a most generous Perfon he was, refolv'd to raise his Fortune; towards the beginning whereof, by his countenance, and follicitation, he prevail'd with a rich Widow to Marry him, who had been a Lady of extraordinary Beauty, which she had not yet outliv'd; and though she had no great Dower by her Husband, a younger Brother of the Earl of Suffolk; yet the inherited a fair Fortune of her own, near Plymouth; and was besides very rich in a Personal Estate, and was look'd upon as the richest Match of the West. fter of it, without allowing her, out of her own, any Competency for her felf; and indulged to himfelf all those Licences in her own House, which to Women are most grievous, she found means to withdraw her felf from him; and was with all kindness receiv'd into that Family, in which she had before been Married, and was always very much respected.

HER Absence was not ingrateful to him, till the Tenants refused to pay him any more Rent, and he found himself on a fuddain depriv'd of her whole Estate, which was all he had to live upon: for it appear'd now, that she had, before her Marriage with him, fettled her entire Fortune fo absolutely upon the Earl of Suffolk, that the present right was in Him, and he required the Rents to be paid to him. This begot a Suit in the Chancery between Sr Richard Greenvil and the then Earl of Suffolk, before the Lord Coventry, who found the Conveyances in Law to be fo firm, that he could not only not relieve Sr Richard Greenvil in Equity, but that in Justice he must Decree the Land to the Earl; which he did. very fensible Mortification transported him so much, that, being a Man who used to speak very bitterly of those he did nor love, after all endeavours to have engaged the Earl in a Personal Conflict, he reveng'd himself upon him in such opprobrious Language, as the Government, and Justice of that time would not permit to pass unpunish'd; and the Earl appeal'd for Reparation to the Court of Star-Chamber; where St Rithard was Decreed to pay three thousand pounds for damages to him; and was likewife fin'd the Sum of three thous fand pounds to the King; who gave the Fine likewife to the Earl: fo that Sr Richard was committed to the Prison of the Fleet in Execution for the whole fix thousand pounds; which at that time was thought by all Men to be a very fevere and rigorous Decree, and drew a general Compassion towards the unhappy Gentleman.

AFTER he had endured many years of strict Imprisonment, a little before the beginning of the late Troubles, he made his escape out of the Prison; and transporting himself beyond the Seas, remain'd there till the Parliament was call'd that produced so many Miseries to the Kingdom; and when he heard that many Decrees which had been made, in that time, by the Court of Star-Chamber, were repeal'd, and the Persons griev'd, absolv'd from those Penalties, he likewise return'd, and petition'd to have his Cause heard; for which a Committee was appointed; but before it could be brought to any conclusion, the Rebellion broke out in Ireland. Among the first Troops that were raised, and transported for the suppression thereof, by the Parliament (to whom the King had unhappily committed the prosecution of

it) Sr Richard Greenvil, upon the fame of being a good Officer, was fent over with a very good Troop of Horse; was Major of the Earl of Leicester's own Regiment of Horse, and was very much esteem'd by him, and the more by the Parliament, for the signal acts of Cruelty he did every day commit upon the Irish; which were of so many kinds upon both Sexes, Young and Old, hanging old Men who were Bedrid, because they would not discover where their Money was, that he believ'd they had; and old Women, some of Quality, after he had plunder'd them, and sound less than he expected; that they can hardly be believ'd, though notoriously known to be true.

AFTER the Cessation was made in Ireland, he pretended that his Conscience would not give him leave to stay there, and was much the more welcome to the Parliament, for declaring to heartily against that Ceffation; and S. William Waller being in the beginning of this year to make his Expedition into the West, after the Battle of Alresford, Sr Richard Greenvil was either commended to him, or invited by him, to Command the Horse under him; which he chearfully accepted, not without many infinuations, how much his Interest in Devon-shire, and Cornwal, would advance Theirs. He receiv'd from the Parliament a great Sum of Money, for the making his Equipage; in which he always affected more than ordinary Luffre; and Sr William Waller communicated to him all his defigns, with the ground and foundation of them, as to an entire Friend, and an Officer of that Eminence, by whose Advice he meant to govern his own Conduct.

H 1s first and principal delign was to surprise Basing House, by a correspondence with the Lord Edward Pawlet, Brother to the Marquis of Winchester, and then with him, as unsufpected as a Brother ought to be. For the better execution of this, Sr Richard Greenvil was fent before with a Body of the Horse, that all things might be well disposed, and prepared against the time Waller himself should come to him. He appointed a Rendezvous for the Horse at Baglbot, and the same day march'd out of London only with his Equipage; which was very Noble; a Coach and fix Horses, a Waggon and fix Horses, many Led Horses, and many Servants; with those, when he came to Stanes, he left the Bagfhot road, and march'd directly to Reading, where the King's Garrison then was; and thence, without delay, to Oxford, where he was very graciously received by the King, and the more, because he was not expected. He communicated then to the King the whole defign of the surprise of Basing; upon which the King ient an Express immediately to the Marquis, with all the particular informations; who thereupon feifed upon his Brother, and the other Conspirators; who confess'd all, with all the circumstances of the correspondence and combination. The Marquis prevail'd with the King, that he might only turn his Brother out of the Garrison, after Justice was done upon his Complices. This very happy and feafonable discovery, preferv'd that important place; which, without it, had infallibly been lost within few days, and therefore could not but much endear the Person of the Discoverer; upon whom the Parliament thunder'd out all those reproaches, which his deferting them in such a manner was liable to; and denounced all those judgements upon him of Attainder, Confication, and incapacity of Pardon, which they used to do against those, who, they thought, had done them most mischief, or against whom they were most incensed: which was all the excuse he could make for his fevere proceedings against those of their Party, who fell into his hands afterwards where he Commanded.

FROM Oxford he went quickly into the West, before he had any Command there; declaring that he would affif Colonel Digby; who, upon Prince Maurice's departure from thence with his Army, was left to Block up Plymouth; which he did with much Courage and Soldierly ability. To Him he had Letters from the King, that he should put Sr Richard Greenvil into the possession of his Wife's Estate, that lay within his Quarters, and which was justly liable to a Sequestration by her living in London, and being too zealoully of that Party; which the Colonel punctually did. And so he came, after so many years, to be again possessed of all that Estate; which was what he most set his Heart upon.

ONE day he made a Visit from his House, which he call'd his own, to the Colonel; and dined with him; and the Colonel civilly fent half a dozen Troopers to wait on him home, left any of the Garrison, in their usual Excursions, might meet with him. In his return home, he faw four or five fellows, coming out of a Neighbour Wood, with Burthens of Wood upon their backs, which they had stolen. He bid the Troopers fetch those fellows to him; and finding that they were Soldiers of the Garrison, he made one of them hang all the rest; which, to fave his own Life, he was contented to do: so strong his Appetite was to those Executions he had been accustom'd to in Ireland, without any kind of Commission or pretence of Authority.

SHORTLY after, upon a Sally made with Horse and Foot from the Town, Colonel Digby (who belides the keenness of his Courage had a more composed understanding, and less liable to fumes, than some of his Family who had sharper Parts) Charging them with such vigour as Routed, and drove them back, receiv'd himself in the close an unhappy wound, with a Rapier, in the Eye; which pierced near his Brain; fo that, though he was brought off by his Soldiers, it was very long before he recover'd enough to endure the Air, and never did the effects of the Wound. Upon this accident St Richard Greenvil was placed in that Command, which he executed for some Months; until, upon the Advance of the Earl of Effex, he was compell'd to retire into Cornwal, where We found him at the King's coming thither.

THIS fo large excursion upon a private Person may seem very extravagant, and to carry in it too much Animolity against the memory of a Man who did some things well, and was not without some merit in the King's Service: But they who know the Occurrences of the next year, which will be faithfully related, and confider the feverity that he compell'd the Prince to use towards him, of which he made a great noise afterwards in the World, and prevailed with some good Men to believe that the proceeding against him was too rigorous, and that the Council then about the Prince had fome Personal disrespect towards him, may reasonably believe that this enlargement was in some degree necessary, that such a Man's Original, Nature, Manners, and Disposition, should be manifest and clearly understood.

THE King was now most intent to return into his Winter Quarters at Oxford, which was all he could propose to himfelf; in which he expected to meet with all the obstructions and difficulties his enraged Enemies could lay in his way. He knew well that Waller was even ready to come out of London, and that Middleton was retired from Tiverton to joyn with him; that they had fent for the Earl of Manchester to march towards the West with his Victorious Army: So that, if he long deferr'd his march, he must look to Fight another Battle, before he could reach Oxford. Notwithstanding all which, his Army that had been upon hard duty; and had made long marches above fix Months together, required some telt and refreshment; the Foot were without Cloaths, and Shoes; and the Horse in such ill humour, that without Money they would be more discontented. To provide the best remedy that could be applied to these evils, the next day after the King march'd from Plymouth, himself, attended only by his own Troop, and the principal Officers of the Court, went to Exeter; appointing the Army, by flow marches, to follow, and to be Quarter'd at Tiverton, and the other Towns adjacent; where they arriv'd on the 21st of September.

HIS Majesty now quickly discern'd how continual hard duty, with little fighting, had lessen'd and diminish'd his Army. His own Body of Foot, which when he enter'd Corn-wal, were above four thousand, was at this time much fewer; and Prince Maurice's, which confifted of full four thousand five hundred, when the King first view'd them at Kirton, was not now half the Number. Of all the Forces under Greenvil, which had made so much noise, and had been thought worthy of the Name of an Army, there were only five hundred Foot, and three hundred Horse lest with him, for the Blocking up Plymouth; the rest were dwindled away; or else, which was his usual Artifice, he had encouraged them to stay for some time in cornwal, and then to repair to him, as many of them did; for his Forces fuddainly encreased; and the truth is, few of the cornish march'd Eastward with the King. The King's Horse were harrass'd, and many of them dead in the marches; which contributed to the discontent of the Riders; so that great Provisions were to be made before they could begin a new march. By the diligence and activity of the Commissioners, appointed in Devon-Shire for those Affairs, his Majesty was within few days supplied with two thoufand pounds in Money, which was prefently distributed among the Horse; and three thousand Suites of Cloaths, with good proportions of Shoes and Stockings; which were likewife deliver'd to the Foot. What remain'd yet wanting for the Horse and Foot, was promised to meet them, upon their first entrance into Somerset-shire; where the Commissioners of that County, had undertaken they should be ready.

THERE was another thing of equal importance to be provided for, before the King left Exeter; which was, the Blocking up the Troops of Lyme; which were grown more infolent by the Success they had Had; and made Incursions fometimes even to the Walls of Exeter; and to restrain a stronger Garrison in Taunton. For when Prince Maurice raised his Siege from Lyme, he had very unhappily drawn out the Garrison of Taunton, which consisted of eight hundred Men, under the Command of Sr John Stawel, a Person of that Eminent Courage and Fidelity, that he would never have given it up; and left only fourfcore Men in the Caftle to be kept by a Lieutenant, who basely gave it up, assoon as Essex in his passage demanded it; for which he deservedly afterwards suffer'd Death. And it was now, by the Garrison the Earl put into it, and the extreme Malignity and Pride of the Inhabitants, in both which they exceeded, become a sharp Thorn in the fides of all that Populous County.

To remedy the first of these, some Troops which depended upon the Garrison of Exeter, were assign'd, and were to receive Orders from Sr John Berkley, Governour thereof; who was the more vacant for that Service by the reduction of Barnstable; which was done during the King's stay at Exeter.

The other of Taunton, was more unhappily committed to Colonel Windham, the Governour of Bridgewater; who, though a Gentleman of known Courage and unquestionable Fidelity, by the Divisions and Factions in the Country, was not equal to the work. To dispatch all this, the King staid not a full week at Exeter; but hasten'd his march to chard in Somerset-shire, where he staid longer; for which he paid dear after; for he might otherwise have reach'd Oxford, before the Enemy was in a Conjunction strong enough to stop him: yet even that stay could not be prevented, except he would have left the Money and Cloaths (which the Commissioners of Somerset-shire promised, and did deliver there at last) behind him; which would not have been grateful to the Army.

IT was the last of September, that the King march'd from chard; and Quarter'd that Night at a House of the Lord Pawlet's, where Prince Rupert met him, and gave him an account of the unhappy Affairs of the North, and that he had left about two thousand Horse under the Command of Sr Marmaduke Langdale; which he might as well have brought with him, and then the King would have had a glorious end of his Western Expedition. Prince Rupert presently return d to Briftol, with Orders, affoon as was possible, to march with those Northern Horse under S. Marmaduke Langdale, and two thousand Foot, which were in Wales, under Colonel Charles Gerrard, into Glocester-shire; by which the Enemy might be obliged to divide their Force, which if they should still keep united, the Prince from thence would be able to joyn with the King: But these Orders were not executed in time. The King's Army at this time confifted in the whole but of five thousand five hundred Foot, and about four thousand Horse; and Waller was already come with his Horse to Blanford; but fome of his Troops being beaten up by those of the King's, he retired to Shaftsbury, and those parts of Wilt-shire adjacent. It concern'd the King very much, before he left those parts, to Relieve Portland Castle, which had been now Belieged from the time of the Earl of Effex's march that way. that purpose, he march'd to Sherborne; where he staid six days too long, though in that time he raifed the Siege before Portland Caltle, if he had not hoped by that delay that his Nephew Prince Rupert would have been well advanced in his march. S. Lewis Dives was left with his own Regiment of one hundred and fifty old Soldiers, and some Horse in Skerborne Caltle, and made Commander in Chief of Dorfet-fbire; in hope that he would be able shortly by his activity and the very good affection of that County, to raise Men enough to recover Weymouth: and he did perform all that could be realonably expected from him. His Majetty had a great delire;

in his march to Oxford, to relieve Donnington Castle, and Basing; which was again Besieg'd by almost the whole Army of the Enemy; and then to send a good Party to relieve Banbury, which had been close Besieg'd by Colonel John Fienner, another Son of the Lord Say, with all the Forces of Northampton-shire, Warwick, and Coventry; and bravely defended by Sr William Compton, full three Months; but by this time reduced to the utmost extremity.

In order to preserve all this, the King came to Salisbury upon the fifteenth of October; where he understood, "that Waller lay at Andover with his Troops; that Manchester "was advanced as far as Reading with five thousand Horse and "Foot, and four and twenty pieces of Ordnance; and that "four Regiments of the Train'd-bands of London, were be-"ginning their march to him; and that three thousand of the "Horse and Foot of the Earl of Effex's Army were near "Portsmouth, expecting Orders to joyn with the rest. This might very well have disposed his Majesty to have halten'd his march to Oxford, which would have made a fair conclusion of the Campagne; and this was the more reasonable, because here the King receiv'd Letters from Prince Rupert, in which he declar'd, "that it was not possible for him to bring up his "Troops to foon as his Majesty expected; and indeed as his present condition required: and if this had been resolv'd, both Donnington Castle, and Banbury, might have been seasonably set at liberty; but a great gayety possessed Goring, that he earnestly advised the King to march, with secrecy and expedition, to beat Waller; who lay at Andover, a good distance from the rest, with three thousand Horse and Dragoons; which the King, upon the unanimous consent of the Council, confented to.

HE had left all the Cannon that he had taken from Effex, in Exeter; and now he fent all his great Cannon to a Garrison he had within two Miles of Salisbury at Langford, a House of the Lord Gorges; where was a Garrison of one hundred Men, Commanded by a good Officer. The rest of the Cannon and Carriages were left at Wilton, the House of the Earl of Pembroke, with a Regiment of Foot to guard them; and the King appointed the Rendezvous for the Army to be the next Morning, by feven of the Clock, near clarendon Park; and good Guards were fet at all the Avenues of the City, to keep all People from going out, that Waller might not have any notice of his purpose: and if the hour of the Rendezvous had been observ'd, as it rarely was (though his Majesty was himself the most punctual, and never absent at the precife time) that defign had succeeded to wish. For though the Foot under Prince Maurice came not up till eleven of the clock, so that the Army did not begin it's march till twelve, yet they came within four Miles of Andover, before Waller had any Notice of their Motions; when he drew out his whole Body towards them, as if he meant to Fight; but upon view of their Strength, and the good Order they were in, he changed his mind, and drew back into the Town; leaving strong Party of Horse and Dragoons to make good his Retreat. But the King's Van Charged, and Routed them with good Execution, and purfued them through the Town, and lew many of them in the Rear, until the darkness of the Night fecur'd them, and hinder'd the others from following farther. But they were all scatter'd, and came not quickly together again; and the King Quarter d that Night at Andover. The scattering this great Body under Waller in this manner, and the little relistance they made, so raised the Spirits of the King's Army, that they defir'd nothing more than to have a Battle with the whole Army of the Enemy; which the King meant not to feek out, nor to decline Fighting with them, if they put themselves in his way. And so he resolv'd to raise the Siege of Donnington Castle, which was little out of his way to Oxford. To that purpose, he sent Orders for the Cannon which had been left at Langford, and Wilton, to make all hast to a place appointed between Andover and Newbury; where he staid with his Army, till they came up to him; and then marched together to Newbury, within a Mile of Donnington.

THE Blockade of Donnington-Castle had been (when Middleton from thence pursued his march into the West) left to the care of Colonel Horton; who for some time was contented to Block it up; but then finding his Summons neglected, and that they had store of Provisions within, and having an addition of Forces from Abingdon and Reading, he resolv'd to Besiege it; which he begun to do the 29th of September; and made his Approaches, and rais'd a Battery on the foot of the Hill next Newbury, and plyed it so with his great Cannon, that, after twelve days continual shooting, he beat down Three Towers and a part of the Wall; which he believ'd had so humbled the Governour and the Garrison, that they would be no longer to itubborn as they had been; and therefore he fent them another Summons, in which he magnified his own clemency, "that prevail'd with him, now "they were even at his mercy, to offer them Quarter for their Lives, if they gave up the Castle before Wednesday at ten "of the Clock in the Morning; but if that his favour was "not accepted, he declard, in the presence of God, that there "Thould no Man amongst them have his Life spard. But his Soldiers, being well inform'd of the refolution of those within, declin'd that hot Service; and plyed it with their Artillery until the next Night; and then remov'd their Battery to the other fide of the Castle; and begun their Approaches by Saps; when the Governour made a strong Sally, and beat them out of their Trenches, and kill'd a Lieutenant Colonel, who Commanded in Chief, with many Soldiers; that their Chief Cannoneer through the Head, brought away their Cannon-Baskets, and many Armes, and retired with very little los: yet the next Night they finish'd their Battery: and continued some days their great shot, till they heard of the Approach of the King's Army; whereupon they drew of their Ordnance, and their Train'd-bands of London being not yet come to them, the Earl thought fit to march away to a greater distance; there having been, in nineteen days, above one thousand great that spent upon the Walls, without any other damage to the Garrison, than the beating down some old parts thereof.

behaviour, and there was then so little apprehension of dread of the Enemy, that his Majesty thought not of prosecuting his Journey towards Oxford, before he should Relieve both Basing and Banbury. And now importunities being sent from the last, which was even upon the point of rendering for want of Victuals, they having already eaten most of their Horses, his Majesty was well content that the Earl of Northampton, who had the Supreme Government of that Garrison, where he had left his brave Brother his Lieutenant, should, with three Regiments of Horse, attempt the relieving it; Letters being fent to Oxford, "that Colonel Gage, with some "Horse and Foot from thence, should meet him; which they did punctually; and came time enough to Banbury before they were expected: yet they found the Rebels Horse (Superior in number by much to theirs) drawn up in five Bodies on the South fide of the Town, near their Sconce; as if, upon the advantage of that ground, they meant to Fight. But two, or three thors, made at them by a Couple of Drakes brought from Oxford by Colonel Gage, made them stagger, and retire from their ground very disorderly. Their Cannon and Bag-

upon the first advance of the King's Troops. Colonel Gage with the Foot went directly to the Castle, that they might be at Liberty; whilst the Earl of Northampton follow'd the Horse so closely, that they found it best to make a stand; where he furiously Charg'd and Routed them; and, notwithstanding they had lined some Hedges with Musqueteers, pursued them till they were scatter'd, and totally dispersed; their General. young Fiennes, continuing his flight, till he came to coven-The Foot, for the most part, by diftry, without staying. perfing themselves, escaped by the Inclosures, before Colonel Gage could come up. But there were taken, in the Chase, one Field piece, and three Waggons of Armes and Ammunition; many flain; and two Officers of Horse, with near one hundred other Prisoners, four Cornets of Horse, and two hundred Horses, were taken; and all this with the loss of one Captain and nine Troopers; some Officers, and others, being wounded, but not mortally. Thus the Siege was raifed from Banbury; which had continued full thirteen Weeks; fo notably defended, that though they had but two Horses left uncaten, they had never fuffer'd a Summons to be fent to them; and it was now Reliev'd the very day of the Month upon which both Town and Castle had been render'd to the King two years before; being the 26th of October.

THOUGH the Relief of Banbury succeeded to wish, yet the King paid dear for it foon after: the very day after that Service was perform'd, Colonel Urry, a Scots-man, who had formerly ferv'd the Parliament, and is well mention'd, in the transactions of the last year, for having quitted them, and perform'd fome fignal Service to the King, had in the West, about the time the King enter'd into Cornwal (in a discontented humour, which was very natural to him) defired a Pass to go beyond the Seas; and so quitted the Service: but instead of embarking himself, made hast to London; and put himfelf now into the Earl of Manchester's Army, and made 2 discovery of all he knew of the King's Army, and a description of the Persons and Customes of those who principally commanded; to that as they well knew the conftitution, and weakness of the King's Army, they had also Advertisement of the Earl of Northampton's being gone, with three Regiments of Horse, to the Relief of Banbury. Whereupon, within two days after, all those Forces which had been under Ef-Jex and Waller, being united with Manchefter (with whom likewise the Train'd-bands of London were now joyn'd; all which made up a Body of above eight thousand Foot; the number of their Horse being not Inserior) advanced towards the King, who had not half the number before the departure of the Earl of Northampton, and stay'd still at Newbury with a reso-

The second Battle at Newbury.

IT was now too late to hope to make a Safe retreat to Oxford, when the whole Body of the Enemies Army, which had receiv'd politive Orders to Fight the King as foon as was possible, appear d as near as Thackham; so that his Majesty not at all difmay'd, refolv'd to stand upon the Defensive only; hoping that, upon the advantage he had of the Town of Newbury and the River, the Enemy would not speedily Advance; and that in the mean time, by being compell'd to lodge in the Field, which grew now to be very Cold, whilft his Army was under cover, they might be forced to retire. The King Quarter'd in the Town of Newbury; and placed strong Guards on the South of the Town: but the greatest part of the Army was placed towards the Enemies Quarters, in a good House belonging to Mr Doleman at Shaw, and in a Village near it, defended by the River that runs under Donnington-Castle, and in a House between that Village and Newbury, about which a Work was cast up, and at a Mill upon the River of Kennet; all which lay almost East from the Town. Directly North from thence were two open Fields, where most of the Horse stood with the Train of Artillery, and about half a mile West, was the Village of Speen; and beyond it a small Heath. In this Village lay all Prince Maurice's Foot, and some Horse, and at the Entrance of the Heath a work was cast up, which clear'd the Heath. In this posture they had many Skirmishes with the Enemy for two days, without losing any ground; and the Enemy was still beaten off with loss.

ON Sunday Morning, the feven and twentieth of October, by the break of day, one thousand of the Earl of Manchester's Army, with the Train'd-bands of London, came down the Hill; and passed the River that way by Shaw; and, undiscover'd, forced that Guard which should have kept the Pass near the House; that was entrenched where Sr Bernard Astley lay; who instantly, with a good Body of Musqueteers, fell upon the Enemy; and not only Routed them, but compell'd them to Rout two other Bodies of their own Men, who were coming to second them. In this pursuit very many of the Enemy were flain, and many drown'd in the River, and above two hundred Armes taken. There continued, all that day, very warm Skirmishes in several parts; the Enemies Army having almost encompassed the King's; and with much more loss to Them, than to the King; till, about three of the Clock in the Afternoon, Waller with his own, and the Forces which had been under Effex, fell upon the Quarter at Speen, and passed the River; which was not well defended by the Officer who was appointed to guard it with Horse and Foot, very many of them being gone off from their Guards, as never imagining that they would, at that time of day, have attempted a Quarter that was thought the strongest of all. But having thus got the River, they march'd in good Order, with very good Bodies of Foot, winged with Horse, towards the Heath; from whence the Horse which were left there, with too little resistance, retir'd; being in truth much overpower'd, by reason the Major part of them, upon considence of security of the Pass, were gone to provide Forage for their Horse.

By this means, the Enemy possessed themselves of the Ordnance which had been planted there; and of the Village of Speen; the Foot which were there, retird to the Hedge next the large Field between Speen and Newbury; which they made good: at the same time, the right Wing of the Enemies Horse advanced under the Hill of Speen, with one hundred Musqueteers in the Van, and came into the open Field, where a good Body of the King's Horse stood; which at first receiv'd them in some disorder; but the Queen's Regiment of Horse, commanded by Sr John Cansfield, charged them with so much Gallantry that he routed that great Body; which then fled; and he had the execution of them near half a mile; wherein most of the Musqueteers were slain, and very many of the Horse; insomuch that the whole Wing rallied not again that night. The King was at that time with the Prince, and many of the Lords, and other his Servants, in the middle of that Field; and could not, by his own Presence, restrain those Horse which at the first approach of the Enemy were in that disorder, from shamefully giving Ground. So that if Sr 70hm Cansfield had not, in that Article of Time, given them that brisk Charge, by which other Troops were ready to charge them in the Flank, the King himself had been in very great danger.

Ar the same time, the left Wing of the Enemies Horse advanced towards the North-side of the great Field; but before they got thither, Garing with the Earl of cleveland's Brigade, Charg'd them so vigorously, that he forced them back in great consulion over a Hedge; and following them, was Charg'd by another fresh Body; which he deseated likewise, and slew very many of the Enemy upon the place; having not only routed and beaten them off their ground, but endur'd the Shot of three Bodies of their Foot in their pursuit, and in their retreat, with no considerable damage, save that the Earl of cleveland's Horse falling under him, he was taken Prisoner; which was an extraordinary loss. Whilst this was doing on that side, twelve hundred Horse, and three thousand

Foot of those under the Earl of Manchester, advanced with great Resolution upon shaw-House, and the Field adjacent; which quarter was defended by Sr Jacob Aftley, and Colonel George Lifle; and the House, by Lieutenant Colonel Page. They came finging of Psalms; and, at first, drove forty Musqueteers from a Hedge, who were placed there to stop them; but they were presently Charg'd by Sr John Brown with the Prince's Regiment of Horse; who did good execution upon them, till he faw another Body of their Horse ready to Charge him, which made him retire to the Foot in Mr Doleman's Garden, which flanked that Field, and give fire upon those Horse, whereof very many fell; and the Horse thereupon Wheeling about, Sr John Brown fell upon their Rear, kill'd many, and kept that Ground all the day; when the Reserve of Foot, Commanded by Colonel The well, gall'd their Foot with feveral Vollies; and then fell on them with the But-ends of their Musquets, till they had not only beaten them from the Hedges, but quite out of the Field; leaving two Drakes, some Colours, and many dead Bodies behind At this time, a great Body of their Foot attempted Mr Doleman's House, but were so well entertain'd by Lieutenant Colonel Page, that after they had made their first effort, they were forced to retire in fuch Confusion, that he pursued them from the House with a notable Execution; insomuch that they left five hundred dead upon a little fpot of ground; and they drew off the two Drakes out of the Field to the House, the Enemy being beaten off and retired from all that Quarter.

It was now night; for which neither Party was forry; and the King, who had been on that fide where the Enemy only had prevail'd, thought that his Army had suffer'd alike in all other places. He saw they were entirely possessed of Speen, and had taken all the Ordnance which had been lest there; whereby it would be easy for them, before the next Morning, to have compassed him round; towards which they might have gone far, if they had found themselves in a condition to have purfued their fortune.

HEREUPON, as foon as it was night, his Majesty, with the Prince, and those Lords who had been about him all the day, and his Regiment of Guards, retired into the Fields under Donnington Castle, and resolved to prosecute the resolution that was taken in the morning, when they saw the great Advantage the Enemy had in numbers, with which he was like to be encompassed, if his Forces were beaten from either of the Posts. That resolution was, "to march away in the "night towards Wallingford; and to that purpose, all the Carriages, and great Ordnance, had been that Morning drawn under under Donnington Castle; so he sent Orders to all the Officers, to draw off their Men to the fame Place; and receiving Intelligence at that time that Prince Rupert was come, or would be that night at Bath, that he might make no stay there, but prefently be able to joyn with his Army, his Majetty himself, with the Prince, and about three hundred Horse, made halt thither; and found Prince Rupert there; and thence made what hast they could back towards Oxford. The truth is, the King's Army was not in so ill a condition, as the King conceiv'd it to have been: that Party which were in the Field near Speen, kept their ground very resolutely; and although it was a fair Moon-shine night, the Enemy, that was very near them, and much Superior in Number, thought not fit to affault or diffurb them. That part of the Enemy that had been so roughly treated at Shaw, having received Succour of a strong Body of Horse, resolv'd once more to make an attempt upon the Foot there; but they were beaten off as before; though they stood not well enough to receive an equal loss, but retired to their Hill, where they stood still. This was the last Action between the Armies; for about ten of the Clock at night, all the Army, Horse, Foot, and Cannon, upon the King's Orders, drew forth their several Guards to the Heath about Donnington Castle; in which they left most of their wounded Men, with all their Ordnance, Ammunition, and Carriages; then Prince Maurice, and the other Officers, march'd in good Order away to Wallingford, committing the bringing up the Rear to Sr Humpbrey Bennet (who had behav'd himself very Signally that day) who with his Brigade of Horse march'd behind, and receiv'd not the least diffurbance from the Enemy; who, in fo light a Night, could not but know of the Retreat, and were well enough pleased to be rid of an Enemy that had handled them fo ill. By the Morning, all the Army, Foot as well as Horse, arrivdat Wallingford; where having Refresh'd a little, they march'd to Oxford; without feeing any Party of the Enemy that look'd after them.

MANY made a Question which Party had the better of the Day; and neither was well enough satisfied with their Success. There could be no question there were very many more kill'd of the Enemy, than of the King's Army; whereof were missing, only Sr William St Leger, Lieutenant Colonel to the Duke's Regiment of Foot; Lieutenant Colonel Tipping, and Lieutenant Colonel Leake, both Officers of Horse, who were all there slain, with not above one hundred Common Soldiers, in all places. The Earl of Brentford, General of the Army, was wounded on the head; Sr John Cansfeild, Sr John Greenvil, and Lieutenant Colonel Page, were wounded; N n 2

but all recover'd. The Officers of the Enemies fide were never talk'd of, being for the most part, of no better Families than the Common Soldiers. But it was reasonably computed, by those who saw the Action in all places, that there could not be so few as one thousand dead upon the place: yet because the King's Army quitted the Field, and march'd away in the Night, the other side thought themselves Mafters; and the Parliament celebrated their Victory with their usual Triumphs; though, within few days after, they discern'd that they had little reason for it. They came to know, by what accident was not imagin'd, that the Earl of Brentford remain'd that night in the Castle, by reason of the hurt in his Head, and so sent Colonel Urry to him to perswade him to give up the Castle, and to make him other large Offers; all which the General rejected with the Indignation that became him. No more shall be said of the Colonel, because, after all his tergiversations, he chose at last to lose his Life for and in the King's Service; which ought to expiate for all his transgressions, and preserve his memory from all unkind Reflections.

THE next day, when they knew that the King's Army was retired, and not till then, they made hafte to possess themselves of Newbury; and then drew up their whole Army before Donnington-Castle, and summon'd the Governour is to deli-"ver it to them, or else they would not leave one Stone upon "another. To which the Governour made no other reply, than "that he was not bound to repair it; but however he "would, by God's help, keep the ground afterwards: feeing his obstinacy, they offer'd him "to march away with the "Armes, and all things belonging to the Garrison; and, when that mov'd not, "that he should carry all the Cannon, and "Ammunition with him; to all which he Answer'd, "that "he wonder'd they would not be fatisfied with fo many An-"fwers that he had fent, and defired them "to be affured, "that he would not go out of the Castle, till the King sent "him Order to do. Offended with these high Answers, they refolv'd to Assault it; but the Officer who commanded the Party, being kill'd with some few of the Soldiers, they retired; and never after made any attempt upon it; but remain'd quietly at Newbury in great Faction among themselves; every Man taking upon himself to find fault, and censure what had been done, and had been left undone, in the whole day's Service.

THE King met Prince Rupert, as he expected, with Colonel Gerrard, and Sr Marmaduke Langdale; and made all the haft he could to joyn those Forces with his own Army, that so he might march back to Newbury, and disengage his

Cannon,

Cannon, and Carriages. By the way he met the Earl of Northampton, and those Regiments which had Reliev'd Ran-bury; and having with marvellous Expedition caused a new Train of Artillery to be form'd, he brought his Army again to a Rendezvous on Bullington-Green; where, with the Addition of those Forces, and some Foot, which he drew out of Oxford, under the Command of Colonel Gage, it appear'd to be full six thousand Foot, and sive thousand Horse; with which he march'd to Wallingford; and within a day more than a Week after he had lest Donnington Castle, sound himself Theking rethere again in so good a posture, that he resolv'd not to de-lieves Doncline Fighting with the Enemy; but would be first possessed castle.

THE Enemies Army lay still at Newbury, perplexed with the Divisions and Factions among their own Officers, without any notice of the King's advance, till a Quarter of their Horse was beaten up. The next Morning, the King put his Army into Battalia; Prince Rupert, who was now declared General, led the Van; and got possession of the Heath, on the back fide of the Castle; from which a small Party might have kept him, the entrance into it being very steep, and the way narrower. On that Heath, the King's Army was drawn up about Noon, every one being prepared to Fight; and none of the Enemy appearing, they march'd by the Caftle over the River by a Mill, and two Fords below it, without any opposition; and thence drew into the large Field between Speen and Newbury; which was thought a good place to expect the Enemy; who, in the mean time, had drawn a great Body of their Horse and Foot into the other Field toward Shaw, and had made Breatt-works and Batteries on the back tide of Newbury; which Town they resolved to keep, and stand upon the defensive, as the King had done before; preluming, that they now having the warmer Lodging, might better attack the King after his Men had lain a night or two in the Fields; it being now the Month of November, but fair for that Season. Some light Skirmishes passed between the Horse, but when the King faw upon what difadvantages he must force them to Fight, he called his Council together; who were unanimous in opinion, "that fince he had Reliev'd the Caftle, "and put sufficient Provisions into it, and that it was in his "power to draw off his Ordnance and Ammunition from "thence, he had done his business; and if any Honour had "been lost the other day, it was regain'd now, by his having "passed his Army over the River in the face of Theirs, and "offer'd them Battle; which they durst not accept. Upon which the King resolved to attempt them no farther, but gave Nn 3

Orders to retire in their view, with Drums Beating and Trumpets Sounding, the same way he came over the River. So the King lay that night at Donnington Castle, and all the Army about him.

THE King had not yet done all he meant to do, before he took up his Winter Quarters; and was willing, that the Enemy should have an opportunity to Fight with him, if they defir'd it: And therefore, on the Sunday morning the tenth of November, his Majesty march'd with all his Cannon and Ammunition over the Heath from Donnington, over a fair Campagne, to Lamberne; in which march, some of the Enemies Horse attempted his Rear, but were repulsed with loss; many being flain, and some taken Prisoners. There the King Quarter'd that night, and the next day, to refresh his Men, for the ill Lodging they had endured at Donnington; having fent some Persons of great Reputation and Interest to Marlborough, to make large provisions for Him, and his Army. And then, fince he heard the Enemy lay still at Newbury, he march'd to Marlborough; where he found all things to his wish. His heart was let upon the relief of Basing, which was now again distress'd; the Enemy having, as is faid before, begirt it closely from the time that Gage had reliev'd it. He had a great mind to do it with his whole Army; that thereby he might draw the Enemy to a Battle; but, upon full Debate, it was concluded, "that the fatest way would be to do it by a strong Party; that one thousand Horse should be drawn out, every "one of which should carry before him a Bag of Corn, or other Provisions, and march so as to be at Basing House the e next morning after they parted from the Army; and then "every Trooper was to call down his Bag, and to make their "retreat as well as they might: And Colonel Gage, who had To good fuccess before, was appointed to Command this Party; which he chearfully undertook to do. The better to effect it, Hungerford was thought the fitter place to Quarter with the Army, and from thence to dispatch that Party; so his Majesty march'd back to Hungerford, which was half way to Newbury: the Enemy was in mean time march'd from thence to Basing; which, they thought, would, upon the light of their whole Army, prefently have yielded; but finding the Marquis still obstinate to defend it, they were weary of the Winter War, and so retired all their force from thence, and quitted the Siege the very day before Gage came thither; so that he casily deliver d his Provisions, and retired to the King without any inconvenience. His Majesty then march'd to Farrington, with some hope to have surprised Abingdon in his way; but he found it too well provided; and so after he had consider'd where to Quarter his Horle, which had formerly had their head head Quarter at Abingdon, and those places which were now under the power of that Governour, he return'd to Oxford; The King where he arriv'd to the universal Joy, on the three and twen-returns to tieth of November; a Season of the year fit for all the Troops Oxford.

THE King was exceedingly pleased to find how much the Fortifications there had been advanced by the care and diligence of the Lords; and was very gracious in his acknowledgement of it to them. And the Governour Sr Arthur Afton, having, some Months before, in the Managing his Horse in the Fields, caused him to fall, had in the fall broken his own Leg, and, fliortly after, been compell'd to cut it off; fo that, if he recover'd at all, which was very doubtful, he could not be fit for any active Service; his Majesty resolv'd to confer that Government upon another. Of which resolution, with all the circumstances of grace and favour, and fending him a Warrant for one thousand pounds a year Pension for his Life, he gave him notice; and then, to the most general satisfaction of all Men, he conferr'd that Government upon Colonel Gage; whom he had before Knighted. Sr Arthur Afton was fo much displeased with his Successor, that he belought the King to confer that Charge upon any other Person; and when he found that his Majesty would not change his purpose, he sent to some Lords to come to him, who he thought were most Zealous in Religion, and defired them to tell the King from him, "that though he was himself a Roman Catholick, he "had been very careful to give no scandal to his Majesty's "Protestant Subjects; and could not but inform him, that "Gage was the most Jesuited Papist alive; that he had a Jesuit "who liv'd with him; and that he was prefent at all the Ser-"mons among the Catholicks; which he believ'd would be "very much to his Majesty's differvice. So much his Passion and Animolity over-ruled his Conscience

The King liked the choice he had made; and only advised the new Governour, by one of his Friends, "to have so much discretion in his Carriage, that there might be no notice taken of the Exercise of his Religion; to which animadversion he Answer'd, "that he never had dissembled his Religion, nor ever would; but that he had been so wary in the Exercise of it, that he knew there could be no Witness produced, who had ever seen him at Mass in Oxford; though he heard Mass every day; and that he had never been but once at a Sermon; which was at the Lodging of Sr Arthur's Daughter; to which he had been invited with great importanity; and believ'd now that it was to entrap him. But the poor Gentleman enjoy'd the Office very little time; for within a Month, or thereabout, making an attempt to break down culbam Bridge near Abingdon, where he intended to erect a Royal Fort, that should have kept that Garrison from that fide of the Country; he was thot through the Heart with a Musquet Bullet. Prince Rupert was present at the Action, having approv'd, and been much pleased with the design; which was never pursued after his death: and in truth the King fustain'd a wonderful loss in his death; he being a Man of great wisdom and temper; and one among the very few Soldiers, who made himself to be Universally lov'd and esteem'd.

THOUGH the King's Condition was now much better, than, in the beginning of the Summer, he had reason to expect (he had broken, and defeated two Armies of the Parliament, and return'd into his Winter Quarter with advantage, and rather with an encrease than diminution of his Forces) yet his necessities were still the same, and the Fountains dryed up from whence he might expect Relief; his Quarters fhorten'd, and leffen'd by the lofs of the whole North: for after the Battle of York, the Scots return'd to Reduce New-Caftle; which they had already done; and all other Garrisons which had held out for the King; and when that Work should be throughly and sufficiently done, it must be expected that Army should again move South-ward, and take such other Places, as the Parliament should not be at leifure to look after themselves.

The Temper

THE King's Army was less united than ever; the old Geof the Ar- neral was fet aside, and Prince Rupert put into the Command, my, and Court which was no Popular Change: for the other was known to overlights in his Conduct; was willing to hear every thing Debated, and always concurr'd with the most reasonable Opinion; and though he was not of many words, and was not quick in hearing, yet upon any Action he was sprightly, and Commanded well. The Prince was Rough, and Pasfionate, and lov'd not Debate; liked what was propos'd, as he liked the Persons who propos'd it; and was so great an Enemy to Digby and Colepepper, who were only present in De-bates of the War with the Officers, that he crossed all they propos'd. The truth is, all the Army had been dispos'd, from the first raising it, to a Neglect and Contempt of the Council; and the King himself had not been sollicitous enough to preserve the Respect due to it; in which he lessen'd his own Dignity.

GORING, who was now General of the Horse, was no more gracious to Prince Rupert, than Wilmot had been; had all the other's faults, and wanted his regularity, and preferving his respect with the Officers. Wilmot lov'd Debauchery, but that it out from his bulinels; never neglected that, and rarely miscarried in it. Goring had a much better Understanding, and a sharper Wit (except in the very exercise of Debauchery, and then the other was inspir'd) a much keener Courage, and presentness of Mind in danger: Wilmot discern'd it farther off, and because he could not behave himself so well in it, commonly prevented, or warily declin'd it; and never drank when he was within distance of an Enemy: Goring was not able to relift the Temptation, when he was in the middle of them, nor would decline it to obtain a Victory: as, in one of those fits, he had suffer'd the Horse to escape out of Cornwal; and the most fignal Misfortunes of his Life in War, had their rife from that uncontroulable Licence. Neither of them valued their promises, professions, or friendships, according to any Rules of Honour, or Integrity; but Wilmot violated them the less willingly, and never but for some great benefit, or convenience to himself: Goring without scruple, out of Humour, or for Wit's fake; and lov'd no Man fo well, but that he would cozen him, and then expose him to Publick Mirth for having been cozen'd: therefore he had always fewer Friends than the other, but more Company; for no Man had a Wit that pleas'd the Company better. The Ambition of a Wit that pleas'd the Company better. both was unlimited, and so equally incapable of being contented; and both unrestrain'd by any respect to good Nature or Justice, from pursuing the satisfaction thereof: yet Wilmot had more Scruples from Religion to startle him, and would not have attain'd his end by any gross, or foul Act of wickedness; Goring could have passed through those pleasantly; and would, without hesitation, have broken any Trust, or done any Act of Treachery to have fatisfied an ordinary passion, or appetite; and in truth, wanted nothing but Industry (for he had Wit, and Courage, and Understanding, and Ambition, uncontroul'd by any fear of God, or Man) to have been as eminent, and successful in the highest attempt of wickednels, as any Man in the Age he liv'd in, or before. Of all his Qualifications, Diffimulation was his Master-piece; in which he so much excell'd, that Men were not ordinarily asham'd, or out of countenance, with being deceiv'd but twice by him.

THE Court was not much better dispos'd than the Army; they who had no Preferment, were angry with those who had; and thought they had not deserv'd so well as themselves: They who were envied, found no satisfaction or delight in what they were envied for, being poor and necessitous, and the more sensible of their being so, by the Titles they had receiv'd upon their own violent Importunity. So that the King was without any joy in the Favours he had conferr'd, and yet was not the less sollicited to grant more to others of the same kind; who, he foresaw, would be no better pleas'd than the rest: and the pleasing one Man this way, displeas'd one hundred; as his Creating the Lord colepepper at this time, and making him a Baron (who in truth had ferv'd him with great Abilities; and, though he did imprudently in desiring it, did deferve it) did much diffatisfy both the Court, and the Army; to neither of which he was in any degree gracious, by his having no Ornament of Education, to make Men the more propitious to his parts of Nature; and dispos'd many others to be very importunate to receive the same Obligation.

THERE had been another Counsel enter'd upon, and concluded with great Deliberation and Wisdom, which turn'd at this time to his Majesty's disadvantage; which was the Cesfation in Ireland; enter'd into, as hath been faid before, with all the reason imaginable, and in hope, to have made a good Peace there, and to to have had the Power of that united Kingdom, to have affilted to the suppressing the Rebellion in this. But now, as all the Supplies he had receiv'd from thence upon the Cellation, had been already destroy'd without any benefit to the King, so his Majesty found, that he should not be able to make a Peace there; and then the Government there would be in the worle condition by being depriv'd of so many good Officers, and Soldiers, upon the conclusion of the Cessation. There had been Commissioners from that time fent over to the King from the Confederate Roman Catholicks, to treat a Peace; the Lord Lieutenant, and Council, had fent likewise Commissioners to inform the King of all things necessary to be consider'd in the Treaty; and the Parliament which was then fitting in Ireland, had fent likewise Commissioners, in the Name of the Protestants in that Kingdom, to prevent the making any Peace; and with a Petition to dissolve the Cessation that had been made.

Propositions from Ireed by the King.

THE Commissioners from the Confederate Roman Catholicks, demanded "the Abrogation, and Repeal of all those hand, rejett- "Laws, which were in force against the Exercise of the Ro-"man Religion: That the Lieutenant, or Chief Governour, "should be a Roman Catholick; and that there should be no "distinction made, whereby those of that Religion should not "be capable of any Preferment in the Kingdom, as well as "the Protestants; together with the Repeal of several Laws, which that Nation thought to have been made in their prejudice.

> THE Commissioners from the State (whereof some were of the Privy Council) professed "that they desired a Peace "might be made; but propos'd in order, as they faid, fecurity of the Kingdom, "that all the Irish might be Dis-

arm'd;

"arm'd; and such among them, as had been most signal and barbarous in the Massacres in the beginning of the Rebellion, might be excepted from Pardon, and prosecuted with the utmost rigour of Law: That the Laws might be put in Execution against all Roman Catholicks, and especially against all Jesuits, Priests, and Fryars; and that they might be obliged to pay all the Damages which had been sustain'd by the War.

THE Commissioners from the Protestants demanded, "that the Cessation might be dissolved, and the War carined on with the utmost Rigour, according to the Act of Parliament that had been made in the beginning of the Rebellion; and that no Peace might be made on any

"Conditions.

THE King demanded of the Irish, "whether they believ'd "it could be in his Power, if it were agreeable to his Conficience, to grant them their Demands? and whether he must not thereby purchase Ireland with the loss of England and Scotland? There were among them some sober Men, who confessed "that as his Majesty's Affairs then stood, they believ'd he could not grant it; and they hoped, that their "General Assembly would, when they should be inform'd of the truth of his Majesty's Condition, which was not known to them, be perswaded to depart from some of their Demands; but that, for the present, they had not Authority to

" recede from any one Propolition. THE King then asked the Commissioners who had been fent over by the Marquis of Ormond, Lieutenant of the Kingdom, "which Forces they thought to be the stronger, the "King's Army, or that of the Rebels; they confessed "the "Rebels to be much superior in Power, and that they were "possessed of more than three parts of the Kingdom. King then ask'd them, "whether they thought it probable, "now they found themselves to be the Stronger, that the "Rebels would be perswaded to yield to so disadvantageous "terms, as they propos'd, and to be so wholely at the Mercy "of those whom they had so much provoked? and if they "could be so disposed, whether they believ'd that they were "able, though they should be willing, to fell all they have in "Ireland to pay the Damages which had been fulfain'd by "the War? The Commissioners acknowledged, "that they thought the last impossible; and that there might be a mi-"tigation in that particular; but for the former, they durst anot advise his Majesty to recede at all; for that there could be no other fecurity for the Protestants in that Kingdom, "but by leaving the Irifb without any capacity, or ability to "Trouble them: for their perfidiousness was such, that they "could not be trusted; and therefore they must be put into fuch a Condition, by being totally disarm'd, that they flould not be able to do any Mischief; or that all the Protestants must leave the Kingdom to the entire possession of the Irish; and whether that would be for his Majesty's Service and Security, they must refer to his own Wisdom.

THE King then fent for the Commissioners from the Parliament, on the behalf of the Protestants, and ask'd them, "whether they were ready, if the Ceffation were expired, to "renew the War, and to profecute it hopefully, to the Re-"duction or Suppression of the Irish? They answer'd very clearly, "that in the State they were in, they could not carry "on the War, or defend themselves against the Irish, who "were much Superior to them in Power; but if his Majesty "would recruit his Army, and fend over Money, and Armes, "and Ammunition, with Shipping, they made no doubt, but with God's bleffing, they should be able shortly to reduce them, and drive them out of the Kingdom. The King "them, and drive them out of the Kingdom. then ask'd them, "whether they did in truth think, that his "Majesty was able to send them such Supplies as they stood "in need of? or whether they did not, in their Consciences, "know, that he was not able to fend them any part of it, and " stood in want of all for his own Support? They answerd, et that they hoped he would make a Peace with the Parliament, "and would then be able to fend over fuch Affiftance to Ire-" land, as would quickly fettle that Kingdom.

But after all these discourses, his Majesty prevailed not with any of them to depart from the most unreasonable of all their Demands; whereupon he dismissed them; and told the Irish, "it had been in their Power so far to have obliged "him, that he might hereafter have thought himself bound to have gratissed them in some particulars, which were not now seasonable to have been done, but they would repent this their senseless perverseness, when it would be too late, and when they sound themselves under a Power that would de"stroy them, and make them cease to be a Nation.

So they all left Oxford; and his Majesty, notwithstanding all this Resolution, not to depart from any thing, that might in any degree be prejudicial to the Protestant Interest in that Kingdom, found that he suffer'd under no reproach more in England, than by having made that Cessation: so wonderfully unreasonable was the generality of the Nation then by the absurd imputation of his Majesty's favouring the Irish.

THE streights in which the King now was, brought him to some reflections he had never made before; and the considerations of what might probably be the event of the next Summer, disposed him to inclinations which were very contrary to what he had ever before entertain'd. His three younger Children were taken from the Governess in whose hands he had put them, and were not only in the Parliament Quarters, but expressly by their Order, put into the Custody of One in whom the King could have the less confidence, because it was One in whom the Parliament confided so much. He had with him the Prince, and the Duke of Tork, both young; and he had no resolution more fixed in him, than that the Prince hould never be absent from him; which, as hath been touch'd before, made him less consider what Governour, or Servants he put about him; refolving to form his Manners by his own Model. But now he began to fay "that Himself and the Prince were too much to venture in one bottom; and that it was now time to unboy him, by putting him into some action and acquaintance with business, out of his own sight: but communicated these thoughts only with the Lord Digby. the Lord colepepper, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer; and was thought to confer more with the Lord Colepepper upon the Subject, than with either of the other; but had some particular thoughts upon which he then conferr'd with no body. There was but one Province in which the Prince could reide, after he was sever'd from the King; and that was the West; which was yet in a worse condition than it had been, by the Rebels being possessed of Taunton, one of the chief Towns in Somerfet-shire; and though it was an open, and unfortified place, it was very strong against the King in the natural disaffection of the Inhabitants, which were very numerous; and all the places adjacent of the fame ill Principles; and Waller had already fent some Troops thither to confirm them in their Rebellious Inclinations, and had himself a resoution speedily to go thither, with a Body sufficient to form an Army for the reduction of the West: nor was the design improbable to succeed; for the reputation of the Scots Army, upon the recovery of all the North, had shaken and terrified all the Kingdom; and the King's Army was the last Enemy the West had been acquainted with, and had left no good Name behind it.

To prevent this mischief, Goring (who had now made a sast friendship with the Lord Digby; either of them believing he could deceive the other, and so with equal passion embracing the Engagement) was sent with some Troops to Salisbury, from whence he might cassly prevent any motion of Waller; without which, Taunton would be in a short time reduced by the Garrisons the King had in the Country: so that this alteration rather consirm'd, than diverted his Majesty, in his thoughts of sending the Prince thither: and he begun to publish his purpose, and named Counsellors to be with his

A Council fettled for the Prince of Wales.

Highness, by whose Advice all things should be done; his Majesty's purpose being in truth, only at that time that the Prince should go no farther West than Bristol; and that there might no jealousies arise from this Action (which every Body knew was so far from the King's former purpose; and it might be imagin'd, that his Highness would be sent to the Queen his Mother into France; which many unreasonably apprehended) the King declared what Council he intended should be about his Son; the Reputation of whom, he thought, would allay all jealousies of that kind. He named the Duke of Richmond, the Earl of Southampton, the Lord Capel, the Lord Hopton, the Lord Colepepper, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and appointed them "to meet frequently at the "Prince's Lodging, to confider with his Highness, what pre-"parations should be made for his Journey, and in what man-"ner his Family should be established. There was one Perfon more, who of necessity was to wait on the Prince, the Earl of Berk-shire, his Governour; and then his Majesty found, what wrong Measures he had taken in the conferring that Trust; and lamented his own error to those he trusted; but knew not how to prevent the Inconveniences that might enfue, unless by applying two remedies, which were not na tural, and might have been productive of as great Inconveniences. The one was, to leffen the Prince's Reverence, and Esteem for his Governour; which was very sufficiently provided for. The other, to leave the Governour without any more Authority, than every one of the Council had; and fo much less, as the Prince had a better efteem of every one of Them, than he had of him: and so left him without a Governour, which would have been a little better, if he had been without the Earl of Berk-shire too.

Divisions aat Westminster.

WHEN the King was in this Melancholick posture, it was mongst those a great refreshment, and some advantage to him, to hear that the disorder the Parliament was in, was Superior to His. The Cause of all the Distractions in his Court, or Army, proceeded from the extreme poverty and necessity his Maje-Ity was in; and a very moderate supply of Money would, in a Moment, have extinguished all those distempers. But all the Wealth of the Kingdom, for they were well nigh policifed of all, could not prevent the same, and greater distractions and emulations, from breaking into the whole Government of the Parliament: for all the personal Animolities imaginable broke out in their Councils, and in their Armies; and the House of Peers found themselves, upon the matter, excluded from all power, or credit, when they did not concur in all the demands which were made by the Commons.

THAT violent Party, which had at first cozen'd the relt

into the war, and afterwards obstructed all the Approaches towards Peace, found now that they had finished as much of their work, as the tools which they had wrought with, could be applied to; and what remain'd to be done, must be dispatched by new Workmen. They had been long unfarisfied with the Earl of Effex, and He as much with Them; both being more follicitous to suppress the other, than to destroy the King. They bore the loss and dishonour he had sustain'd in Cornwal, very well; and would have been glad, that both He and his Army had been quite cut off, instead of being diffolv'd; for most of his Officers and Soldiers, were corrupted in their Affections towards them; and defired nothing but Peace: fo that they refolv'd never more to truft, or employ any of them. But that which troubled them more, was, that their belov'd Earl of Manchester, upon whom they depended as a fast Friend, by whom they might insensibly have divested the Earl of Effex of all inconvenient Authority in the Army, appear'd now as unapplicable to their purposes as the other; and there was a breach fallen out between Him and Oliver Cromwell, which was irreconcilable, and had brought fome Counfels upon the Stage, before they were ripe.

CROMWELL accused the Earl of Manchester, "of having betray'd the Parliament out of Cowardice; for that he "might, at the King's last being at Newbury, when he drew "off his Cannon, very eafily have Defeated his whole Army, "if he would have permitted it to have been engaged: that "he went to him, and shew'd him evidently how it might be "done; and defir'd him that he would give him leave, with "his own Brigade of Horse, to Charge the King's Army in "their Retreat; and the Earl, with the rest of his Army, "might look on, and do as he should think fit; but that the "Earl had, notwithstanding all importunity us'd by him and "other Officers, politively and oblimately refused to permit "him; giving no other reason, but that, he said, if they did "engage, and overthrow the King's Army, the King would "always have another Army to keep up the War; but if that "Army which he Commanded, should be overthrown, be-"fore the other under the Earl of Effex should be reinforced, "there would be an end of their pretences; and they should "be all Rebels, and Traytors, and executed and forfeited by " the Law.

This pronunciation what the Law would do against them, was very heavily taken by the Parliament, as if the Earl believ'd the Law to be against them, after so many Declarations made by them, "that the Law was on Their side, and "that the King's Armes were taken up against the Law. The Earl consessed "he had used words to that effect, that they " should be treated as Traytors, if their Army was Defeated, "when he did not approve the advice that was given by the "Lieutenant General; which would have exposed the Army "to greater hazard, than he thought feasonable in that Con-"juncture, in the middle of the Winter, to expose it to. He then recriminated Cromwell, "that, at another time Crom-"well discoursing freely with him of the State of the King-"dom, and proposing somewhat to be done, the Earl had Anfwer'd, "that the Parliament would never approve it; to which Cromwell presently replied, "My Lord, if you will "flick firm to honest Men, you shall find your felf in the "head of an Army that shall give the Law to King and Par-"liament; which discourse, he said, made great impression "in him; for he knew the Lieutenant General to be a Man " of very deep defigns; and therefore he was the more care-"ful to preferve an Army, which he yet thought was very " faithful to the Parliament.

This discourse startled those who had always an aversion to Cromwell, and had observ'd the fierceness of his Nature, and the Language he commonly used when there was any mention of Peace; so that they desir'd that this matter might be throughly examin'd, and brought to Judgement. But the other fide put all obstructions in the way, and rather choic to lose the advantage they had against the Earl of Manchester, than to have the other matter examin'd; which would unavoidably have made some discoveries they were not yet ready to produce. However the Animolities encreased, and the Parties appear'd barefaced against each other; which augmented the distractions, and divided the City as well as the Parliament; and new opinions started up in Religion; which made more subdivisions; and new terms and distinctions were brought into discourse; and Fanaticks were now first brought into appellation: which kind of confusions exceedingly difposed Men of any sober understanding, to wish for Peace; though none knew how to bring the mention of it into the Parliament.

THE Scotish Commissioners were as jealous, and as unsatished as any other Party; and found, fince the Battle of Tork, neither their Army, nor themselves so much consider d, as before; nor conditions perform'd towards them with any punctuality. They had long had jealoufy of Cromwell, and Sr Henry Vane, and all that Party; which they faw encreased every day; and grew powerful in the Parliament, in the Council, and in the City. Their facred Vow and Covenant was mention'd with less reverence, and respect, and the Independents, which comprehended many Sects in Religion; spake publickly against it; of which Party Cromwell and Vane, were the Leaders; with very many of their Clergy Men, who were the most Popular Preachers, and in the Assembly of Divines had great Authority: fo that the Scots plainly perceiv'd, that though they had gone as far towards the destruction of the Church of England, as they defir'd, they should never be able to establish their Presbyterian Government; without which they should lose all their Credit in their own Country. and all their Interest in England. They discern'd likewise, that there was a purpose, if that Party prevail'd, to change the whole Frame of the Government, as well Civil as Ecclefialtical, and to reduce the Monarchy to a Republick; which was as far from the end and purpose of that Nation, as to restore Episcopacy. So that they saw no way to prevent the Mischief and Confusion that would fall out, but by a Peace; which they begun heartily to wish, and to conspire with those of that Party which most desir'd to bring it to pass; but how to fet a Treaty on foot, they knew not.

The House of Peers, three or four Men excepted, wished it; but had no power to compass it. In the House of Commons, there were enough who would have been very glad of it, but had not the Courage to propose it. They who had an inward aversion from it, and were resolv'd to prevent it by all possible means, wrought upon many of the other to believe, "that they would accept of a Proposition for a Treaty, "if the King desir'd it; but that it would be dishonourable, and of very pernicious consequence to the Nation, if the Parliament first propos'd it. So that it seem'd evident, that if any of the Party which did in truth desire Peace, should propose it to the Parliament, it would be rejected; and rejected upon the point of Honour, by many of those who in their hearts pray'd for it.

THEY tried their old Friends of the City, who had ferv'd their Turns so often, and set some of them to get hands to a Petition, by which the Parliament should be mov'd, "to send "to the King to Treat of Peace. But the design was no sooner known, but others of an opposite Party were appointed to set a counter Petition on soot, by which they should "dis" claim any Consent to, or Approbation of the other Petition; "not that they did not desire Peace, as much as their Neightbours (no body was yet arriv'd at the impudence to profess against Peace) "but that they would not presume to move the Parliament in it, because they knew, their wisdom "knew best the way to obtain it, and would do what was mecessary and sit towards it; to which they wholely left it.

This Petition found more Countenance among the Magistrates, the Mayor, and Aldermen; Sr Henry Vane having diligently provided, that Men of his own Principles and In-Vol. II. Part 2. O e clinations, clinations, should be brought into the Government of the City; of which he saw they should always have great need, even in order to keep the Parliament well disposed. So that they who did in truth desire any reasonable Peace, found the way to it so difficult, and that it was impossible to prevail with the two Houses to propose it to the King, that they resolved, "it could only rise from his Majesty; and to that "purpose they should all labour with their several Friends at "Oxford, to incline the King to send a Message to the Parliament, to offer a Treaty of Peace in any place where they should appoint; and then they would all run the utmost

" hazard before it should be rejected.

THE Independent Party (for under that Style and Appellation they now acted, and own'd themselves) which fear'd and abhorr'd all Motions towards Peace, were in as great streights as the other, how to carry on their defigns. They were refolv'd to have no more to do with either of their Generals, but how to lay them alide, was the difficulty; especially the Earl of Effex, who had been fo entirely their Founder, that they ow'd not more to the Power and Reputation of Parliament, than to His fole Name, and Credit: the being able to raise an Army, and conducting it to Fight against the King was purely due to Him, and the effect of his Power. And now to put fuch an Affront upon him, and to think of another General, must appear the highest Ingratitude, and might provoke the Army it felf, where he was still exceedingly belowd; and to continue him in that Trust, was to betray their own Deligns, and to render them impracticable, Therefore, till they could find some expedient to explicate and difintangle themselves out of this Labyrinth, they made no advance towards the Recruiting or Supplying their Armies, nor to provide for any Winter Expedition; only they fent Waller out, with fuch Troops towards the West, as they cared not for, and resolv'd to use their Service no more.

They knew not how to propose the great alterations, they intended, to the Parliament; and of all Men, the Scotish Commissioners were not to be trusted. In the end, they resolved to pursue the Method in which they had been hitherto so successful, and to prepare, and ripen things in the Church, that they might afterwards in due time grow to maturity in the Parliament. They agreed therefore in the Houses (and in those Combinations they were always unanimous) "that "they would have a Solemn Fast-Day, in which they would "seek God (which was the new phrase they brought from scotland with their Covenant) "and desire his Assistance, to "lead them out of the perplexities they were in: and they did as readily agree in the nomination of the Preachers who were to perform that Exercise, and who were more Trusted in the deepest Designs, than most of those who named them were: for there was now a Schism among the Clergy, as well as the Laity; and the Independents were the Bolder, and more Political Men.

WHEN the Fast-Day came (which was observ'd for eight or ten hours together in the Churches) the Preachers pray'd "the Parliament might be inspired with those thoughts, as "might contribute to their Honour and Reputation; and "that they might preserve that opinion the Nation had of "their Honesty and Integrity, and be without any Selfish ends, or seeking their own Benefit and Advantage. After this preparation by their Prayers, the Preachers, let their Texts be what they would, told them very plainly, "that it was "no wonder there was fuch Division among them in their "Counsels, when there was no Union in their hearts: That "the Parliament lay under many reproaches, not only among "their Enemies, but with their best Friends; who were the "more out of countenance, because they found that the asper-"fions and imputations which their Enemies had laid upon "them, were so well grounded, that they could not wipe "them off: That there was as great Pride, as great Ambition, "as many private Ends, and as little Zeal and Affection for "the Publick, as they had ever imputed to the Court: That, "whilst they pretended, at the Publick cost, and out of the "Purses of the poor People, to make a general Reformation, "their chief care was to grow great and rich Themselves; "and that both the City and Kingdom took notice, with "great anxiety of Mind, that all the Offices of the Army, and "all the profitable Offices of the Kingdom, were in the hands "of the Members of the two Houses of Parliament; who, "whilst the Nation grew poor, as it must needs do under "fuch insupportable Taxes, grew very rich; and would, in "a fhort time, get all the Money of the Kingdom into their "hands; and that it could not reasonably be expected, that "fuch Men, who got so much, and enriched Themselves to "that degree, by the continuance of the War, would heartily "pursue those ways which would put an end to it; the end "whereof must put an end to their exorbitant profit. they had exaggerated these reproaches, as pathetically as they could, and the fense the People generally had of the corruption of it, even to a despair of ever seeing an end of the Calamities they fuffain'd, or having any prospect of that Reformation in Church and State, which they had so often and to solemnly promised to effect, they fell again to their Prayers, "that God would take his own Work into his hand; "and if the Instruments he had already imploy'd, were not 00 2 e worthy

"worthy to bring fo glorious a Defign to a conclusion, "that He would inspire others more fit, who might perfect "what was begun, and bring the Trouble of the Nation to a

"Godly period.

After a fast and Cromdinance.

WHEN the two Houses met together, the next day after day, Vane these devout Animadversions, there was another Spirit appear'd in the looks of many of them. Sr Henry Vane told posed a self-them, "if ever God had appear'd to them, it was in the exdenying Or- " ercise of Yesterday; and that it appear'd, it proceeded from "God, because (as he was credibly inform'd by many, who " had been Auditors in other Congregations) the fame lamen-"tations, and discourses, had been made in all other Churches, "as the Godly Preachers had made before Them; which "could therefore proceed only from the immediate Spirit of "God. He repeated some things which had been said, upon which he was best propar'd to enlarge; and besought them "to remember their obligations to God, and to their Coun-"try; and that they would free themselves from those just re-"proaches; which they could do no otherwise, than by de-"vefting themselves of all Offices, and Charges, that might "bring in the least advantage and profit to themselves; by "which only they could make it appear, that they were pub-"lick-hearted Men; and as they pay'd all Taxes and Imposi-"tions with the rest of the Nation, so they gave up all their "time to their Country's Service, without any reward or gra-" tuity.

> HE told them, "that the Reflections of Yesterday, none " of which had ever enter'd upon his Spirit before, had rais'd "another Reflection in him than had been mention'd; which "was, that it had been often taken notice of, and objected "by the King himself, that the Numbers of the Members of "Parliament, who fate in either House, were too few to give "reputation to Acts of so great Moment, as were transacted "in their Councils; which, though it was no fault of theirs, "who kept their proper Stations, but of those who had de-"ferted their places, and their trufts, by being absent from "the Parliament; yet that, in truth, there were too many " absent, though in the Service of the House, and by Their "appointment; and if all the Members were obliged to at-"tend the Service of the Parliament, in the Parliament, it "would bring great reputation to their Numbers, and the "People would pay more reverence, and yield a fuller obedi-"ence to their Commands: and then concluded, "that he "was ready to accuse himself for one of those who gain'd by "an Office he had; and though he was possessed of it before "the beginning of the Troubles, and ow'd it not to the it-"vour of the Parliament (for he had been joyn'd with Sr Wil liam Ruffel in the Treasurer-ship of the Navy by the King's Grant) "yet he was ready to lay it down, to be disposed of "by the Parliament; and wish'd, that the profits thereof might

"be applied towards the support of the War.

WHEN the Ice was thus broke, Oliver Cromwell, who had not yet arriv'd at the faculty of Speaking with decency and temper, commended the Preachers "for having dealt plainly "and impartially, and told them of their faults, which they "had been so unwilling to hear of: that there were many "things, upon which he had never reflected before, yet upon "revolving what had been faid, he could not but confess, "that all was very true; and till there were a perfect refor-"mation in those particulars which had been recommended "to them, nothing would prosper that they took in hand: that "the Parliament had done very wifely, in the entrance into "the War, to engage many Members of their own in the most "dangerous parts of it, that the Nation might see that they "did not intend to Embark them in perils of War, whillt "themselves sate securely at home out of Gun-shot, but would "march with them where the danger most threaten'd; and "those Honourable Persons, who had exposed themselves this "way, had merited fo much of their Country, that their me-"mories should be held in perpetual veneration; and whatso-"ever should be well done after them, would be always im-" puted to their Example: But, that God had so blessed their "Army, that there had grown up with it, and under it, very "many excellent Officers, who were fitter for much greater "Charges than they were now possessed of; and desir'd them "not to be terrify'd with an imagination, that if the highest "Offices were vacant, they should not be able to put as fit "Men into them; for, belides that it was not good to put fo "much trust in any Arm of Flesh, as to think such a Cause as "This depended upon any one Man, he did take upon him "to assure them, that they had Officers in their Army, who "were fit to be Generals in any Enterprise in Christendom.

HE faid "he thought nothing so necessary as to purge, "and vindicate the Parliament, from the partiality towards "their own Members; and made a proffer to lay down his "Commission of Command in the Army; and desir'd, "that an Ordinance might be prepar'd, by which it might be made unlawful, for any Member of either House of Parliament, to hold any Office or Command in the Army, or any Place or Employment in the State; and so concluded with an enlargement upon "the Vices, and Corruptions, which were gotten into the Army; the prophaneness, and impiety, and absence of all Religion; the drinking and gaming, and all "manner of Licence, and Laziness; and said plainly, that till

"the whole Army were new Modell'd, and Govern'd under a stricter Discipline, they must not expect any notable Suc" cess in any thing they went about.

This Debate ended in appointing a Committee, "to pre"pare an Ordinance for the Exclusion of all Members from "their Trusts aforesaid; which took up much Debate, and depended very long before it was brought to a conclusion; and in the end was call'd the Self-denying Ordinance; the driving on of which, exceedingly encreased the inclination of the other Party to Peace; which they did now foresee would only prevent their own ruines, in that of the Kingdom.

A DVICE came from fo many feveral hands to Oxford, that the King should fend a Message to the Houses for Peace, with an Affurance that it would not be rejected, that his Majesty (who still apprehended as great a division among his own Friends upon the Conditions of Peace, out of the universal weariness of the War, as he discern'd there was among his Enemies upon the Emulation in Command, or differences in Religion) enter'd upon the confideration how to bring it to pass. The Members of Parliament were still sitting at Oxford: but they at London who were most desirous of Peace, had given warning to avoid that Rock; and that their Names should never be mention'd; which would have procured an Union between the most irreconcileable Parties, in throwing out such Overtures. On the other fide the sending a bare Message, by a Trumpet, was not probably like to produce any other effect, than an insolent Answer in the same way, or no Answer at all, as his two or three last Messages had done.

In conclusion, the King resolv'd that there should be a Ihort Message drawn; in which, "the continuance of the War, "and the mischiefs it brought upon the Kingdom, should be "lamented: and his defire express'd, that some reasonable "Conditions of Peace might be thought upon; affuring them "that his Majesty would be willing to consent to any thing, "that could confift with his Conscience and Honour. folv'd, that he would fend this Message by some Persons of Condition; who might, upon conference with their Friends, be able to make fome impression; at least discover what might be reasonably expected. And if the Parliament should refuse to grant a Safe Conduct for such Messengers, it might well be prefum'd, what reception the Message it self was like to find. The Persons he resolv'd to send, were the Duke of Richmond, and the Earl of Southampton; both of unblemish'd Honour, and of general Reputation in the Kingdom. So a Trumper was sent to the Earl of Effex for a Safe Guard, or Pass, to those two Lords; to the end they might deliver a Mellage Message from the King to the two Houses concerning a Treaty of Peace. To which the Earl of Essex only answerd, "that he would acquaint the Houses with it, and return their An-

" fwer; and fo dismissed the Trumpet.

THE King had now done his part; and the rest was to be perfected there. They who were refolv'd never to admit a Peace, though they could not still prevent a Treaty, thought they had advantage enough to object against this unusual Mesfage: "If the Message it self had been sent, they might have "judged, whether it had been like to be attended with good "Success, and so might have accepted a Treaty, if they had "approv'd of it; but this fending of Messengers before they "knew what they would bring, was an invention to begin a "Treaty before they admitted it; and to fend Enemies into "their Quarters, with Authority to scatter their Poyson a-"broad: and therefore, with great passion, they pressed, "that "no fuch Pass should be sent. On the other hand it was, with equal passion, alledged, "that the refusal of the Safe "Conduct was a total rejection of Peace, before they under-"flood upon what terms it would be offer'd; which the Peo-"ple would take very ill from them; and conclude that the "War must continue for ever; they therefore wish'd that a "Safe Guard might be fent without delay, and that they "would have a better opinion of their Friends, than to ima-"gine that the Presence, or Power of two Men how consi-"derable foever, would be able to corrupt, or pervert their "Affections from the Parliament.

In this opinion the Scotish Commissioners likewise concurr'd; so that the other Party found it necessary to consent, and the Safe Conduct, after many Debates, was fent accordingly. But that they might not feem to their Friends abroad, to be overpower'd; they revenged themselves in pursuing the dispatch of their Self-denying Ordinance with great vehemence; and because the effect of that was manifestly that they should be without a General, it was already proposed "that Sr Tho-Sir Thomas mas Fairfax (who had behaved himself so signally in their Fairfax is Service, in the Defeat of Colonel Bellasis, and taking him proposed in the House of Prisoner, which gave them their first footing in Tork-bire, Commons to from their being that up and Befieged in Hull; in the over-be made throw of the Lord Byron, and taking all the Irish Regiments; their Geand lastly in the late Battle at York, where he had turned the neval. fortune of the day, when the Scotish Army was Routed and their General Fled) "might now be made their General; for which Oliver Cromwell affured them he was very equal. In the discourses upon this Subject (which found all opposition) as the Service of the Earl of Effex was much magnified, and his merit extoll'd, by those who desired to have no other General, so it was undervalued, and depressed, with some bitterness and contumely, by those who believ'd that all they could do would be to no purpose, if He were not totally excluded from any power.

ABOUT the beginning of December, the Duke of Richmond The Duke of Richmond and the Earl of Southampton, upon their Pass, went from Oxand the Earl ford to London; where they were advised not to go much of Southabroad, lest the People should be apt to do them injury; and fent to Lon-very few had the Courage to come to them, except with don with a great privacy. Only the Scotifb Commissioners, as Men in Message for Soveraign Authority, and Independent upon the Parliament, made no scruple of visiting them, and being visited by them. The Houses did not presently agree upon the manner of their reception, how they should deliver their Message; in which there had been before no difficulty, whilst the War was carried on only by the Authority of the Parliament. Heretofore the Message being deliver'd to either House, was quickly communicated to the other; but now the Scotish Commisfioners made a third Estate, and the Message was directed to Them as well as to the Houses. In the end it was resolv'd, "that there should be a Conference between the two Houses "in the Painted Chamber; at which the Scotish Commissioners "should be present, and fit on one side of the Table; and that "the upper end of it should be kept for the King's Messen-"gers: Where there was a Seat provided for them, all the rest being bare, and expecting that They would be fo too: for though the Lords used to be cover'd whilst the Commons were bare, yet the Commons would not be bare before the Scotish Commissioners; and so none were cover'd. But asfoon as the two Lords came thither, they cover'd, to the trouble of the other; but, being prefently to speak, they were > quickly freed from that Eye-fore. THE two Lords used very few words, in letting them know the King's great Inclinations to Peace; and deliver'd and read their Message to that purpose; which was receiv'd by the Lords without any other expressions than "that they "should report it to the Houses; and so the meeting broke up: And then many of the Lords, and some of the Commons, passed some Compliments and Ceremony to the two Lords, according to the acquaintance they had with them, and found opportunities to see them in private, or to send Confiding Perfons to them. By which means, they found there were great Divisions among them, and upon Points that would admit no reconciliation: and therefore they believ'd that there would be a Treaty of Peace; but they could not make any such guess of the Moderation of the Conditions of the Peace, as to conclude that it would be with effect. For they that most desir'd the Peace, and would have been glad to have had it upon any terms, durst not own that they wish'd it, but upon the highest terms of Honour, and Security for the Parliament; which could neither be Secure, nor Honourable for the King. They discover'd, that they who did heartily wish the Peace, did intend to promote a Treaty between Persons named by the King and Persons named by the Parliament, to meet at some third Place, and not to send Commissioners to Oxford to Treat' with the King himself; which they had already found to be ineffectual, and not more likely now to produce a better end: Whereas they did believe, or seem'd to believe, that how unreasonable soever the Propositions should be, upon which they Treated, they would, by yielding to some things, when they resused others, sooner prevail with the Houses to mollify their demands, than at first to reform them.

THIS Method was not ungrateful to the two Lords; who had the same conceptions, that, if sober Men were named for Commissioners, somewhat would result from the freedom of their Communication. And the Duke of Richmond sent his Secretary Web expressly to Oxford, to know the King's pleafure, "whether, if a third Place were proposed for Com-"missioners on both sides to meet, they should consent to it? Which his Majesty (though he had no mind to trust others, but where himself was present) was perswaded to approve. But all this was but discourse, and private wishes: for it was never brought into Debate; and it was told them very plainly, "that, as long as they staid in Town, the Houses would never "fo much as confer upon the Subject of their Message; be-"cause they found it would be matter of great Debate, and "spend much time; during which they did not desire their "Company, nor to be troubled with their Infusions. And therefore, affoon as they had receiv'd the King's Mellage, they proceeded upon their Trial of the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury before both Houses of Parliament, upon an Impeachment of High Treason, resolving likewise to give that evidence to the People, of what inclination they had to make a Peace with the King. The two Lords, observing this affected delay in the business they were sent about, and being advised by their Friends not to stay longer, but to expect the determination to be fent to Oxford, return'd to the King, with iome confidence that a Treaty would be confented to; and that it would be at some third Place, and not at Oxford, and less at London, by Commissioners which should be agreed on by both fides. But they brought an express delire, and even a condition to the King, from all those with whom they had conferr'd, and who were the chief Persons who advanced the Treaty, "that, if that which they labour'd for, should be yielded

The Trial of Bishop of Canterbury

IT was, as is faid before, a very fad Omen to the Treaty, the Arch- that, after they had received the King's Message by those Noble Lords, and before they return'd any Answer to it, they proceeded in the Trial of the Arch-Bilhop of Canterbury; who had lain Prisoner in the Tower, from the beginning of the Parliament, about four years, without any profecution till this time. Now they brought him to the Barrs of both Houses; charging him with several Articles of High Treason; which, if all that was alledged against him, had been true, could not have made him guilty of Treason. They accused him " of a design to bring in Popery, and of having "correspondence with the Pope, and such like particulars, as the Consciences of his greatest Enemies absolved him from. No Man was a greater, or abler Enemy to Popery; No Man a more resolute and devout Son of the Church of England. He was profecuted by Lawyers, affign'd to that purpose, out of those, who from their own Antipathy to the Church and Bishops, or from some disobligations received from him, were fure to bring Paffion, Animofity, and Malice enough of their own; what evidence soever they had from others. And they did treat him with all the rudeness, reproach, and barbarity imaginable; with which his Judges were not displeased.

HE defended himself with great and undaunted Courage, and less Passion than was expected from his Constitution; anfwer'd all their objections with clearness, and irresistible reafon; and convinced all impartial Men of his Integrity, and his detestation of all Treasonable Intentions. So that though few excellent Men have ever had fewer Friends to their Perfons, yet all reasonable Men absolv'd him from any foul Crime that the Law could take notice of, and punish. However, when They had faid all they could against Him, and he all for himself that need to be said, and no such Crime appearing, as the Lords, as the Supreme Court of Judicatory, would take upon them to judge him to be worthy of death; they reforted He is con- to their Legislative Power, and by Ordinance of Parliament, as demn'd by they call'd it, that is by a determination of those Members an Ordinance who fate in the Houses (whereof in the House of Peers there were not above twelve) they appointed him to be put to death as guilty of High Treason. The first time the two Houses of Parliament had ever assumed that Jurisdiction, or > that ever Ordinance had been made to fuch a purpose; nor could any Rebellion be more against the Law, than that Mur-therous Act.

WHEN the first mention was made of their monstrous burpose, of bringing the Arch-Bishop to a Trial for his Life. he Chancellor of the Exchequer, who had always a great Reverence and Affection for him, had spoken to the King of t, and proposed to him, "that in all events, there might be a Pardon prepared, and fent to him, under the Great Seal of England; to the end, if they proceeded against him in any form of Law, he might plead the King's Pardon; which must be allow'd by all who pretended to be govern'd by the Law; but if they proceeded in a Martial, or any other extraordinary way, without any form of Law, his Maejesty should declare his Justice and Affection to an old faithful Servant, whom he much efteem'd, in having done all towards his prefervation that was in his Power to do. The King was wonderfully pleased with the Proposition; and took from thence occasion to commend the Piety and Virtue of the Arch-Bishop, with extraordinary Affection; and commanded the Chancellor of the Exchequer, to cause the Pardon to be prepared, and his Majesty would Sign and Seal it with all possible secrecy; which at that time was necessary. Whereupon the Chancellor fent for S. Thomas Gardiner the King's Sollicitor, and told him the King's pleasure; upon which he presently drew the Pardon, which was Sign'd and Seal'd with the Great Seal of England, and carefully fent, and deliver'd into the Arch-Bishop's own hand, before he was brought to his Trial; who received it with great joy, as it was a Testimony of the King's gracious Assection to him, and care of him, without any opinion that they who endeayour'd to take away the King's Life, would preferve His by his Majesty's Authority.

WHEN the Arch-Bilhop's Council had perused the Pardon, and confider'd that all possible Exceptions would be taken to it, though they should not reject it, they found, that the Impeachment was not so distinctly set down in the Pardon as it ought to be; which could not be helped at Oxford, because they had no Copy of it; and therefore had supplied it with all those general expressions, as, in any Court of Law, would make the Pardon valid against any exceptions the King's own Council could make against it. Hereupon, the Arch-Bishop had, by the same Messenger, return'd the Pardon again to the Chancellor, with fuch directions and copies as were necessary; upon which it was perfected accordingly, and deliver'd fafely again to him, and was in his hands during the whole time of his Trial. So when his Trial was over, and the Ordinance passed for his Execution, and He called and ask'd, according to cultom in Criminal proceedings, "what "he could fay more, why he should not suffer death? He told them, "that he had the King's gracious Pardon, which he "pleaded, and tender'd to them, and defir'd that it might "be allow'd. Whereupon he was fent to the Tower, and the Pardon read in both Houses; where, without any long Debate, it was declar'd "to be of no effect, and that the "King could not Pardon a Judgement of Parliament. And fo, without troubling themselves farther, they gave order for his Beheading; which he underwent with all Christian Courage and Magnanimity, to the Admiration of the Beholden and Confusion of his Enemies. Much hath been said of the Person of this great Prelate before, of his great Endowments, and natural Infirmities, to which shall be added no more in this place (his memory deferving a particular celebration) than that his Learning, Piety, and Virtue, have been attain'd by very few, and the greatest of his Infirmities are common

WHEN they had dispatched this important work, and thereby receiv'd a new initance of the good Affection and Courage of their Friends, and involv'd the two Houses in fresh guilt and obloquy (for too many concurr'd in it, without considering the heinousness of it, and only to keep their Credit clear and entire, whereby they might with the more Authority advance the Peace that was desir'd) they now enter upon the Debate, "what Answer they should fend the King, "concerning a Treaty for Peace. They who desir'd to advance it, hoped thereby to put an end to all the defigns of new modelling the Army, and to prevent the encrease of those Factions in Religion, which every day broke out among them, to the notorious Scandal of Christianity. They who had no mind to a Treaty, because they had minds averse from all thoughts of Peace, difcern'd plainly, that they should not be able to finish their defign upon the Army, and set many other devices on foot, which would contribute to their convenience, until this longed-for Treaty were at an end; and therefore they all agreed to give some conclusion to it; and resolv'd, that there should be a Treaty, and upon the Method that should be observed in the conducting it; from which they who should be employ'd by them, should not recede or be diverted.

THEN they nominated fixteen Commissioners for the two Houses agree Houses, and four for the Parliament of Scotland, and named Uxbridge for the place where the Treaty should be; which Treaty should be limited to be finish'd within twenty days from the time when it should begin.

UPON this conclusion, they fent their Answer to the Mesfage, they had receiv'd from the King by a Trumpet, in a Letter from their General to the King's General; in which they inform'd his Majesty, "that, out of their passionate delire of "Peace,

They found this Declaration and Ordinana of theirs, invaded in this Message they had now receiv'd from the King. The Lord Dunsmore had been created Earl of ch chefter; Sr Christopher Hatton, Lord Hatton; Sr John Colepapper, Lord Colepapper, with the Addition of Master of the Rolls: which Office they had bestowed upon Lenthall the Speaker, who was in polletion of it; Sr Edward Hyde wa declar'd Chancellor of the Exchequer; which, though it was an Office they had not meddled with bestowing, yet it has passed the Great Seal, after it came into the King's hands. AFTER long Debate, they were contented to infert the Names in their Safe Conduct, without their Honours, or 0 fices; and they were so angry with the Chancellor of the Exchequer, that they had no mind that he should be styled Knight, because he was not so when he left the Parliament But the Scotish Commissioners prevailed in that point, find they had not yet pretended to take away the Use of the King Sword from him: fo they allow'd him, by a Majority of Votes, to be a Knight, and fent their Safe Conduct, in the manner as is mention'd, to Oxford: Upon which the King at the defire of the Persons concern'd, forbore to insist; but giving them still in his own Pass, and in his Commission whereby they were authoriz'd to Treat, the Style and Appel lation which belong'd to them, and which must be allowed by the others before they begun to Treat. King's ComCommissioners were contented, together with a Commission under the Great Seal of England, to take another likewise with them in that form, and only under the Sign-Manual, as was desir'd.

ABOUT the end of January, or the beginning of February, The Treaty the Commissioners on both sides met at Uxbridge; which be-at Uxing within the Enemy's Quarters, the King's Commissioners bridge. were to have such Accommodations, as the other thought fit to leave to them; who had been very civil in the diffribution, and left one entire fide of the Town to the King's Commiffioners, one House only excepted, which was given to the Earl of Pembroke; so that they had no cause to complain of their Accommodation; which was as good as the Town would yield, and as good as the other had. There was a good House at the end of the Town, which was provided for the Treaty, where was a fair Room in the middle of the House, handsomely dressed up for the Commissioners to sit in; a large square Table being placed in the middle with Seats for the Commissioners, one side being sufficient for those of either Party; and a Rail for others who should be thought neceffary to be prefent, which went round. There were many other Rooms on either fide of this great Room, for the Commissioners on either side to retire to, when they thought fit to confult by themselves, and to return again to the publick Debate; and there being good Stairs at either end of the House. they never went through each others Quarters; nor met, but in the great Room.

ASSOON as the King's Commissioners came to the Town. all those of the Parliament came to visit and to welcome them: and, within an hour, those of the King's return'd their visits with usual Civilities; each professing great delire and hope, that the Treaty would produce a good Peace. The first visits were altogether, and in one Room; the Scots being in the fame Room with the English. Each Party eat always together, there being two great lines which ferv'd very well to that purpose. The Duke of Richmond, being Steward of his Majesty's House, kept his Table there for all the King's Commssioners: nor was there any restraint from giving and receiving Visits apart, as their acquaintance, and inclinations disposed them; in which those of the King's Party used their accustom'd Freedom, as heretofore. But on the other side, there was great wariness and reservedness; and so great a jealoufy of each other, that they had no mind to give, or receive Visits to, or from their old Friends; whom they loved better than their New. Nor would any of them be seen alone with any of the King's Commissioners, but had always one of their Companions with them, and sometimes one whom they least trusted. It was observed by the Town, and the People that flocked thither, that the King's Commissioners looked as if they were at home and govern'd the Town; and the other as if they were not in their own Quarters; and the truth is, they had not that alacrity and serenity of Mind, as Men use to have who do not believe themselves to be in a fault.

THE King's Commissioners would willingly have perform'd their Devotions in the Church, nor was there any restraint upon them from doing so, that is by Inhibition from the Parliament, otherwise than that by the Parliament's Ordinance (as they call'd it) the Book of Common-Prayer was not permitted to be read, nor the Vestures, nor Ceremonies of the Church to be used. So that the days of Devotion were observed in their great Room of the Inn; whither many of the Country, and the Train of the Commissioners, and other Persons, who came every day from London, usually reforted. WHEN the Commissioners, on both sides, met first together in the Room appointed for the Treaty, and had taken their Seats, it being left to the King's Commissioners, which fide of the Table they would take; the Earl of Northumberland, who always deliver'd any thing that was agreed between them, and read all the Papers (after the powers of both fide were examined, and perused) proposed some Rules to be obferv'd in the Treaty; "as of having Nothing binding, unless "All were Agreed upon; and fuch like; to which there was no objection; and offer'd, as a direction they had receiv'd from the Parliament, "that they should first enter upon the "matter of Religion, and Treat three entire days upon that "Subject, without entring upon any other; and if all Di-" ferences, in that particular, were not adjusted within those "days, they should then proceed to the next Point, which was "the Militia; and observe the same Method in that, and from thence pass to the business of Ireland; which three Points "being well fettled, they believ'd the other differences would "be with more ease composed; and after those Nine days "were passed, they were to go round again upon the several "Subjects, as long as the time limited would continue: his "Majesty being left at liberty to propose what he thought his, "at his own time, and to change the Method proposed. It was declared, "that the Twenty days, limited for the Treaty, "were to be reckon'd of the days which should be spent in "the Treaty, and not the days of coming or returning, or the days spent in Devotion; there falling out three Sundays and a Fast-day in those Twenty days. The Method was willingly consented to; the King's Commissioners conceiving it would be to no purpose to propose any thing on the King's behalf, ple behalf, till they discern'd what agreement was like to be made in any one particular; by which they might take their Meafures, and might propose any thing of Moment under one of the three Heads mention'd before.

THERE happen'd a very odd Accident, the very first Morning they met at the House to agree upon their Method to be observed in the Treaty. It was a Market day, when they used always to have a Sermon, and many of the Persons who came from Oxford in the Commissioners Train, went to the Church to observe the forms. There was one Love, a young Man, that came from London with the Commissioners, who preached, and told his Auditory, which confifted of the People of the Town, and of those who came to the Market, the Church being very full, "that they were not to expect any "good from the Treaty; for that they came from Oxford with "hearts full of Blood, and that there was as great distance "between this Treaty and Peace, as between Heaven and "Hell; and that they intended only to amuse the People with "expectation of Peace, till they were able to do some not-"able mischief to them; and inveighed so seditiously against all Cavaliers, that is, against all who follow'd the King, and against the Persons of the Commissioners, that he could be understood to intend nothing else, but to stir up the People to mutiny; and in it to do some Act of Violence upon the Com-They were no fooner advertised of it, by several Persons who had been present in the Church, and who gave very particular Information of the very words which had been spoken, than they inform'd the other Commissioners of it: gave them a Charge in writing against the Preacher; and demanded publick Justice. They seem'd troubled at it, and promised to examine it, and cause some severe punishment to be inflicted upon the Man; but afterwards confessed, "that they "had no Authority to punish him, but that they had caused "him to be sharply reprehended, and to be sent out of the "Town; and this was all that could be obtain'd: fo unwilling they were to discountenance any Man who was willing to serve them. This is the same Love, who some years after, by Cromwell's particular profecution, had his head cut off, for being in a Plot with the Scots against the Army, and their Parliament.

It is not the purpose of this Discourse to set down the particular transactions of this Treaty; which were published by the King's Order, shortly after the conclusion of it, and all the Papers, which had been delivered by the Commissioners on either side, exposed to the View of the Kingdom, in the method and manner in which they were delivered. Only such particulars as fell out in that time, and were never communicated, and many of them known to very few, shall be briefly mentioned; that any, who hereafter shall have the perusal of this History, may know how impossible it was, that this Treaty could produce such a Peace as both sides would have been glad of; and that they who govern'd the Parliament then, had at that time the resolution to act those monstrous things, which they brought afterwards to pass.

First of Re-

THE first business to be entred upon, being that of Religion, the Divines of both fides were admitted to be present in the places appointed for them, opposite to each other; and Dr Steward, Clerk of the Closet to the King, was a Commiffioner, as Mr Henderson was on the other fide; and they both fat cover'd without the Bar, at the backs of the Commissioners. On the Parliament Part, it was proposed, "that all the "Bishops, Deans and Chapters, might be immediately taken "away, and abolished; and in the room thereof, that there "might be another Government erected; such as should be "molt agreeable to God's word, and the Practice of the best "Churches: That the Book of Common-Prayer might be "taken away, and totally suppressed; and that, instead there-"of, a Directory might be used (in which there was likewish fet down as much of the Government, which they meant to erect for the future, as was necessary to be provided for the present, and which supplied all the use of Articles or Canons, which they had likewise abolish'd) and "that the King him-4 felf should take the Covenant; and consent to an Act of "Parliament, whereby all Persons of the Kingdom should "be likewise oblig'd to take it. And the Copies of the Covenant, and the Directory were deliver'd at the fame time to the King's Commissioners; which were very long, and necesfary to be read over, before any Answer could be made to them. So they took that Afternoon to peruse them together, and adjourn'd their Treaty till the next Morning; and though they enter'd upon the reading them before dinner, the Dire-Ctory was fo very long, that they spent all that Afternoon, and some part of the Night, before they had finished the reading of them. Then, there being many new terms in the Directory, as Congregational, Classical, Provincial, and Synodical, which were not known in practice, and some expressions in the Covenant, which were ambiguous, and, they well knew, were left fo, because the Persons who fram'd them, were not all of one mind, nor had the fame Intentions in some of the other terms mention'd before, the King's Commissioners caus'd many Questions to be prepared in writing, to be offer'd at the next meeting; wherein they defir'd to be inform'd, what their meaning was in fuch and fuch Expressions, in which they knew well they had feveral meanings, and would hardly concur in one, and the same Answer. ABOUT

A'BOUT the beginning of the Treaty, or the day before it did begin, the Earl of Lowden, Chancellor of Scotland, vifited the Duke of Richmond privately in his Chamber; and either proposed, or was very willing, to have private conference there with the Chancellor of the Exchequer; upon which the Duke, who knew well the other would not decline it. fent to him; and He prefently went to the Duke's Chamber; where he found them both; and after some short Compliments, the Earl told him, "how floutly he had defended his "Knighthood; which the Parliament had refolv'd to have "denied, if he had not convinced them. Thence, he discourfed of "the great prejudice the Parliament had against him, "as a Man who more industriously opposed Peace than any "other of the King's Council: that he had now a good oppor-"tunity to wipe off all those jealousies, by being a good In-"ftrument in making this Peace, and by perswading his Ma-" jesty to comply with the defires and supplications of his Par"liament; which he hoped he would be.

THE Chancellor told him, "that the King did fo much "defire a Peace, that no Man need advise him to it, or could "divert him from it, if fair and honourable conditions of "Peace were offer'd to him; but if a Peace could not be "had, but upon fuch conditions as his Majesty judged incon-"fiftent with his Honour, or his Conscience, no Man could "have credit enough to perswade him to accept it; and that, "for His own part, without reflecting upon the good or ill "opinion the Parliament might have of him, he would dif-" fwade him from confenting to it. The other feem'd disappointed in his fo politive Answer; yet, with great freedom, enter'd upon discourse of the whole matter; and, after some kind of Apology, "that Scotland was fo far engaged in the "Quarrel, contrary to their former Intentions, and Profef-"fions, he did as good as conclude, "that if the King would "fatisfy them in the business of the Church, they would not "concern themselves in any of the other Demands. In which Proposition, finding no kind of Compliance from the Chancellor of the Exchequer, but sharp protestations against the demands, as inconfiftent with Conscience, Justice, or Religion, the conference broke off, without inclination in either of them to renew it. But, from that time, there was more contradiction, and quick repartees between them two throughout the Treaty, than between any other of the Commissioners. And it was manifelt enough, by the private Conferences with other of the Commissioners, that the Parliament took none of the points in controverly less to heart, or were less united in, than in what concern'd the Church.

WHEN, upon the next meeting of the Commissioners

the Questions, which were mention'd before, were read, and deliver'd by the Duke of Richmond, who always perform'd that part on the behalf of the King's Commissioners, as the Earl of Northumberland did on the Parliament's, there was a visible disorder in their Countenances; some of them, smiling, faid, "We look'd into Their Game; but without offering at any Answer, they arose, and went to their Room of confultation; where they remain'd in great passion, and wrangling many hours: fo that the other Commissioners, finding that they were not like fuddainly to agree, adjourn'd till the Afternoon, and departed to dinner. Affoon as they came together in the Afternoon, and were fate, the Earl of Northumberland faid, "that they wonder'd there should appear any "difficulty in any expressions, upon which those Questions had "been administer'd in the Morning; which to Them seem'd "very clear and plain; however, to give their Lordships sa-"tisfaction, that they had appointed another noble Lord, "there present, who was well acquainted with the significaction of all those words, to explain what the common sense and meaning of them was. Thereupon, the Earl of Lautherdale made a discourse upon the several Questions, and what acceptation those expressions and words had. But, being a young Man, not accultom'd to an orderly and decent way of fpeaking, and having no gracious pronunciation, and full of passion, he made every thing much more difficult than it was before: So that the Commissioners desir'd, "that they might " receive an Answer in writing; since it was declared upon "the entrance of the Treaty, that though in Debate any Man "might fay what he thought necessary, yet nothing should " be understood to be the sense of either side, but what was "deliver'd in Writing; and therefore they defir'd, that what "that Noble Lord had faid, which they presumed was the "fense of all the rest, because they had referr'd to Him, and "feem'd fatisfied with what he had deliver'd, might be given "to them in writing; without which they knew not how to "proceed, or give an Answer to what was proposed to them. This demand, founded upon a Rule of their own, which they knew not how to decline, put the Scotiff Commissioners into great passion: for all the English fate ttill without speaking a word, as if they were not concern'd. The Lord Lautherdale repeated what he had faid before, a little more distinctly; and the Chancellor of Scotland, faid, "that the things were fo "plain, that no Man could choose but understand, and re-"member what was spoken; and that the pressing to put it "in writing was only to fpend time; which would be quick-"ly out, half the time affign'd for the business of Religion "being to expire that night; and therefore passionately desir'd them, them, "that they would rest satisfied with what had been

"fpoken, and proceed upon the matter.

IT was replied, "that they could not trust their Memories " fo far, as to prepare an Answer to their demands concern-"ing the Covenant, or Directory, except they were fure that "they understood the full and declared meaning of their de-"mand; which they had less reason now to believe they did, "than before; fince there was fo much difficulty made to "fatisfy them in writing; and therefore they must insist upon "receiving an Answer to the Papers they had given: And two or three of the King's Commissioners withdrew, and prepared another Paper; in which they fet down the reasons which obliged them not to be fatisfied with the discourse which had been made, and why they must insist upon the having it in writing; which being communicated to the rest as they fat, was likewise deliver'd to the others; who could not refuse to receive it, though it was plain enough they never intended to give any Answer in writing; nor they on the King's fide, to defift from demanding it: But they declared, "that as they prefumed, they should, in the end, receive their "Answer in writing, which they should not depart from, so "it was their resolution not to defer their farther proceeding "upon the matter; but they were ready to profecute that in "the method they would defire; and so it was resolv'd, "the "next Morning, to hear the Divines, who were of either "Party, what they would fay against or for Episcopacy, and "the Government, and Lands of the Church; which were equally concern'd in the Debate.

On the King's part, besides Dr Steward, who was a Commissioner in matters relating to the Church, there was Dr Sheldon, afterwards Arch-Bishop of Canterbury; Dr Lany, afterwards Bilhop of Ely; Dr Fern, afterwards Bilhop of chefter; Dr Potter, then Dean of Worcester, and Provost of Queen's College in Oxford; and Dr Hammond; all who, being the King's Chaplains, were fent by him to attend the Commiffioners for their Devotions, and for the other Service of the Church, as the management of the Treaty required; which could not be foreseen: On the Parliament side, besides Me Alexander Henderson, who was the Commissioner, Mr Marshall a Country Parson in Essex, and an eminent Preacher of that Party, who was the Chief Chaplain in the Army, M. Vines, a Parson likewise in Warwick-shire, and a Scholar (both of them of the Affembly of Divines, and so, very conversant in those points relating to the Church, which had been so often disputed there) Mr Cheynel, one who had been Fellow of Merton College in Oxford, and two or three others; who, bearing no parts in the disputes, had not their names remember d.

Cap. 9.

Mr Henderson begun rather with Rhetorick, than Logick, " of the necessity to change the Government of the Church, "for the preservation of the State; which was so much in "danger, that it could be preferv'd no other way; and there-"fore that in Conscience it ought to be consented to; that "the Question was not about the preservation of Both, which, "by the Wisdoms of the Parliaments of both Nations, was "found to be impossible; but fince there could but one stand, "whether they should be both Sacrificed, or the Church given "up, that the State might be preserv'd: nor was the Que-"ftion now whether Episcopacy was Lawful, and the Go-"vernment by Bishops consistent with Religion, but whether "it was fo necessary, that Religion could not be preserv'd "without it; which was to condemn all the Reform'd "Churches of Europe, where there were no Bishops, England "only excepted. It ought therefore to fuffice, that the Parcoliament, which best understood what was good for the Na-"tion, had found it to be a very unnecessary, inconvenient, " and corrupt Government, that had been productive of great "mischief to the Kingdom from the very time of the Refor-"mation; that the Bishops had always favour'd Popery, and "preferv'd, and continued many of the Rights and Customs "thereof in their Government, and Practice; and had of late "introduced many Innovations into the Church, by the exam-" ple and pattern of the Church of Rome, and to the great " scandal of the Protestant Churches of Germany, France, Scot-" land, and Holland; that they had been the occasion of the "War between the two Nations of Scotland, and England; "and then of the Rebellion in Ireland; and now of the Civil "War in England; and thereupon, that the Parliament, in "order to the uniting all the Protestant Churches, which was "the only way to extinguish Popery, had resolv'd to change "this inconvenient, mischievous Government, and erect an-" other in the place of it, which should advance Piety, and "true Religion; and that he hoped the King would concur reader take " in fo Godly an Action, which would prove fo much for his notice that "Glory. * He took notice of " an old Answer formerly made Mr Hender " by a King of England, when the alteration of some Laws fan is mi- " had been desired of him, Nolumus leges Anglia mutare; the English " which, he faid, must be a mistake in the impression: that it flory. "did not prefume to think of compelling the King to change the Government of the Church; but they hoped he would willingly do it, upon the humble Petition of both King-doms, and for his own, and their benefit: That he should fay no more, till he should hear the reasons from the Di-vines on the other side, why his Majesty should not consent to the Advice of his Parliament, since he conceived nothing of Conscience could be alledged against it, because it appeared by what his Majesty had consented to in Scotland, for the utter abolishing of Bishops, that he did not believe in his Conscience, that Episcopacy was absolutely necessary

"for the support of Christian Religion.

Dr Steward, with a much better countenance, told the Commissioners, "that he hoped and knew, that their Lord-" ships were too well acquainted with the Constitution of the "Church of England, and the Foundation upon which it sub-"fifted, to believe it could be shaken by any of those Ar-"guments which had been made against it. He said, that "though he did believe, it was impossible to prove that a "Government, fettled and continued without intermission, " from the time when Christianity was first planted in Eng-"land, and under which the Christian Religion had so much "flourished, was an unlawful and Anti-Christian Govern-"ment; yet that he expected, that they who had sworn to "abolish it, and came now to perswade their Lordships to "concur with them in pressing the King to joyn in the same "obligation, would not urge a less argument for such their "Engagement, than the unlawfulness, and wickedness of that "Government, which Conscience obliged them to remove. "But Mr Henderson had wisely declined that Argument, "though in their Common Sermons, and other Discourses in "Print, they gave it no better Style than Anti-Christian; "and had urged only the inconveniences which had fallen out "from it, and benefit which would refult by the Change, of "which no judgement could be made, till it might be known "what Government they did intend to erect in the place of "it; and fince the Union with the Forreign Protestant "Churches, seem'd to be their greatest reason for the prodi-"gious alteration they proposed, he wish'd that they would "fet down, which Forreign Church it is, to which they meant "to conform, and make their new Government by; for that "he was affured, that the model which they seem affected to "in their Directory, was not like to any of the Forreign Re-"form'd Churches now in the World. He faid, "though he "would not take upon him to censure the Forreign Churches, "yet it was enough known, that the most Learned Men of "those Churches, had lamented that their Reformation was PP4

"not so perfect as it ought to be, for want of Episcopacy; "which they could not be fuffer'd to have: and they had always paid that Reverence to the Church of England, which "they conceiv'd due to it, as to the Church to which God "had vouchfafed the most perfect Reformation, because it re-"tains all that was innocent, or venerable in Antiquity. He then enlarg'd upon the original Institution of Episcopacy; using all those Arguments, which are still used by the most Learned Men in those disputes, to prove, that without Bishops there could be no Ordination of Ministers, and consequently no administration of Sacraments, or performance of the Ministerial Functions. He faid, "he would not prefume to fay any thing " of his Majesty's having consented to the abrogation of Epi-"fcopacy in Scotland, though he knew what his Majesty himce felf thinks of it, only that he had an obligation upon him "in Conscience in this Kingdom, which he had not in that, "his Coronation Oath, by which he was bound to defend the "Rights of the Church; and That alone would make it un-" lawful for his Majesty to consent to what was proposed, "both in the point of Episcopacy, and the alienation of the "Lands of the Church; which would be direct Sacrilege.

Upon these several points, and what resulted from thence, the Divines on both sides spent all that day, Morning and Asternoon, till it was very late in the night, and most part of the next day; only the Commissioners on either side, at the sist coming together, Mornings and Asternoons, presented such Papers as they thought sit, upon what had passed in Debate: As, the King's Commissioners desir'd to know in writing, "wheether the Parliament Commissioners did believe that the Gowernment of the Church by Bishops was unlawful? To which character of the Church by Diniops was unlawfu

When the last of the three first days was past (for it was near twelve of the Clock at Night) and the Scotish Commissioners observed that nothing was consented to which they look'd for, the Chancellor of Scotland enter'd into a long discourse, with much passion, against Bishops, "of the mitchies "they had done in all Ages, and of their being the sole Causes of the late Troubles in Scotland, and of the present Troubles in England: Remember'd, "that the Arch-Bishop of "Canterbury had pursued the Introduction of the Liturgy and the Canons into Scotland, with so great vehemence, that, when it was desir'd, that the publishing them might be suffered for one Month, that the People might be the better prepared to submit to what they had not been before active representations in the secondary of the Bishops themselves; which gainst the advice of many of the Bishops themselves; which "put put the People into such a sury, that they could not be appeased. He lamented and complain'd, that three days had been now spent in fruitless Debates; and that though their Divines had Learnedly made it appear, that Episcopacy had no foundation in Scripture, and that it might be lawfully taken away; and that notwithstanding it was evident, that it had been the cause of great mischief, and the Wisdom of Parliament had thought the utter taking it away to be abfolutely necessary for the preservation of the Kingdom; their Lordships were still unmoved, and had yielded in no one particular of Importance, to give them satisfaction; from which they could not but conclude, that they did not bring that hearty inclination to Peace, which they hoped they would have done; and so concluded with some expressions

more rude and infolent, than were expected.

WHEREUPON the Chancellor of the Exchequer, not without some commotion, faid, "that he did not wonder, that "their Lordships, who had for some years been accustomed " to fuch Discourses, and the more inclin'd to suppose all that "was confidently faid to be reasonably prov'd, and so having " not been used to converse with any Persons of a contrary "opinion, had been brought to consent and approve those al-"terations, which they had proposed; but that it seem'd very "admirable to him, that their Lordships could expect, or "imagine it possible, that they who never had heard such "things faid before, nor could understand in so little time "what had been now faid, should depart from a Faith, and "a form of Worship, in which they had been educated from "their Cradle; and which, upon so long observation, and "experience, they look'd upon with all possible approbation "and reverence, upon only hearing it inveigh'd against three "days; which would have been much too little time to have "warranted a Conversion from much less important opinions, "they had so long entertain'd; though their Arguments had "Had as much weight as they wanted. He faid, "they "were of opinion, that all those mischiefs and inconveniences "which they had mention'd, had in truth proceeded from an "over vehement defire to overthrow Episcopacy, not from "the Zeal to support it: that if the Arch-Bishop of Canter-"bury had been too precipitate in pressing the reception of "that, which he thought a Reformation, he paid dearly for "it; which made him the more wonder, that they should "blame Them, for not submitting to much greater altera-"tions, than were at that time proposed, in three days; when "they reproach'd Him, for not having given Them a whole "Month to consider. He faid, "he might assure their Lord-"Thips with great funcerity, that they were come thither with

"all imaginable passion and desire, that the Treaty might con-"clude in a happy and bleffed Peace; as he still hoped it "would; but if it should be otherwise, that they would still " believe, their Lordships brought with them the same honour-"able and pious Inclinations, though the Instructions, and "Commands from those who trusted them, restrain'd them "from confenting to what in their own judgements feem'd rea-"fonable. And so, without any manner of reply, both sides arose, and departed, it being near midnight.

THERE happen'd a pleasant Accident on one of these days, which were assign'd for the matter of Religion. The Commissioners of both sides, either before their sitting, or after their rifing, entertaining themselves together by the Fire side, as they sometimes did, it being extremely Cold, in general and casual discourses, One of the King's Commissioners ask'd one of the other with whom he had familiarity, in a low Voice, "why there was not in their whole Directory, any mention a "all of the Creed, or the Ten Commandments, and so little of the Lords Prayer? which is only once recommended The Earl of Pembroke, overhearing the discourse, answerd aloud, and with his usual passion, "that He, and many others "were very forry that they had been left out; that the put "ting them in had taken up many hours Debate in the Houle "of Commons, and that at last the leaving them out had been "carried by eight or nine Voices; and so they did not think "fit to infift upon the addition of them in the House of Peers; "but many were afterwards troubled at it, and he verily be "liev'd, if it were to do again, they should carry it for the "inferting'em all; which made many fmile, to hear that the Creed, and the Ten Commandments, had been put to the Question, and rejected: And many of the other were troubled, and out of countenance with the reason the good Lord had given for the Exclusion.

Secondly of

THE next Subject of the Treaty was the business of the the Militia. Militia; which their Commissioners positively requir'd, "to "be entirely vested in the Parliament, and in such Persons as "they thought fit to be confided in. This they faid, was more "necessary than ever, for the securing the People from their "Fears and Jealousies; which were now much encreased, and "were capable of being affwaged by no other means: and deliver'd a large Paper to that purpose, which contained no more than had been often faid in their Declarations, and as often answer'd in those which had been publish'd by the King. And when the Commissioners of the King, whereof there were four very Eminent in the knowledge of the Law, Lane, Gardiner, Bridgeman, and Palmer, made the demand appear to be without any pretence of Law, or Justice, and afferted it con-

But in this particular, he who was most reasonable among hem, thought it very unreasonable to deny them that necesary Security; and believ'd it could proceed from nothing life, but a Resolution to take the highest Vengeance upon heir Rebellion.

THEN they enter'd upon the business of Ireland; in which Thirdly of hey thought they had the King at a very great advantage; Ireland. nd that his Commissioners would not be able to answer the harges they should make upon that particular. And many of he Commissioners on the King's part, who had not been well equainted with those Transactions, thought it would be a ard matter to justify all that the King had been necessitated o do; and any thing of Grace towards the Irish Rebels, was s ungracious at Oxford, as it was at London; because they new the whole Kingdom had a great detellation of them. They ripped up all that had been done from the beginning of hat Rebellion; "how the King had voluntarily committed the carrying on that War to the two Houses of Parliament; that they had Levied great Sums of Money upon the Kingdom for that Service; but finding that it was like to bring a greater Burthen upon the Kingdom than it could bear, that his Majesty had consented to an Act of Parliament for the Encouragement of Adventurers to bring in Money, upon affurance of having Land affign'd to them in that Kingdom, out of the Forfeitures of the Rebels, affoon as the Rebellion should be suppressed; and had likewise, by the same Act, put it out of his Power to make any Peace, or Cellation with those Rebels, or to grant Pardon to any of them without confent of Parliament; and thereupon many of his Majesty's Subjects had brought in very considerable Sums of Money, by which they had been able to manage that War without putting this Kingdom to farther Charge; and God "had so blessed the Protestant Forces there, that they had fubdued and vanquished the Rebels in all Encounters; and, " probably, er probably, by that time, the whole Rebellion had been ex. " tinguish'd, if the King had not, contrary to his promise, and "obligation by that Act of Parliament, made a Ceffation with those Execrable Rebels, when they were not able to continue the War; and had call'd over many of those Regi-"ments, which the Parliament had fent over against the Irish, "to return hither to Fight against the Parliament: by means "whereof his Protestant Subjects of that Kingdom were in "great danger to be deltroy'd, and the Kingdom to be entirely "possessed by the Papists. They enlarged themselves upon this Subject, with all the invidious infinuations they could devife, to make the People believe, that the King was inclined to, and favoured that Rebellion. They demanded, "that "the King would forthwith declare that Ceffation to be void; "and that he would profecute the War against those Rebels "with the utmost fury; and that the Act of Parliament for "their reduction, might be executed as it ought to be.

THE Commissioners of the King prepar'd and deliver'd very full Answer in writing to all their Demands; at the de livery whereof, they appointed the Chancellor of the Exche quer to enlarge upon any of those particulars, which provide This the Counsels that had been taken, just, and necessary. he did so particularly and convincingly, that those of the Parliament were in much Confusion, and the King's Commit fioners much pleased. He put them in mind of "their bring "ing those very Troops, which were Levied by the King "Authority for the Suppression of the Rebellion in Ireland "to Fight against the King at Edge-bill, under the Command " of the Earl of Effex; of their having given over the profe "cution of that War, or fending any supply of Armes, Mo ec ney, or Ammunition thither; having imploy'd those Ma "gazines which were provided for that Service, against his Majesty; insomuch as the Privy Council of that Kingdom "had fent to his Majesty, that he would provide some other way for the prefervation of that Kingdom, fince they could "not be able to support the War any longer, against the "United Power of the Rebels: That all Overtures, which "his Majesty had made towards Peace, had been rejected by "the Parliament; and one hundred thousand pounds, brought "in by the Adventurers for Ireland, had been fent in one " entire Sum into scotland, to prepare and dispose that King "dom to fend an Army to Invade This; which they had "done, and till then his Majesty had not, in the least degree, " fwerv'd from the observation of that Act of Parliament; "but when he faw that the Parliament, instead of profecut-"ing the end and intention of that Statute, apply d it wholely "to the carrying on the War against Himself, he thought cc himfelt II.

himself absolv'd before God and Man, if he did all he could to refeue and defend himself against their Violence, by making a Cessation with the Rebels in Ireland, and by drawing over fome Regiments of his own Army from thence, to affit him in England: which Ceffation had hitherto preserved the Protestants of that Kingdom; who were not able without supplies to preserve themselves from the strength and power of the Rebels; which supplies his Majesty could not, and the Parliament would not fend; and therefore, if the Protestants there, should hereafter be oppressed by the Rebels, who every day procur'd affiftance from abroad, and fo were like to be more powerful, all the Mischiefs and Mifery that must attend them, would, before God and Man, be put to the Account of the Parliament; which had defrauded them of those supplies, which, by his Majesty's care, had been raised, and provided for them; and not to his Majesty, who had done nothing but what he was obliged to do for his own preservation; and if he had not sent for those Soldiers from Ireland, they could not have stayed there without a supply of Money, Cloaths, and Provisions; which the Parliament had not yet fent to that part of the Army which remain'd there, and which could by no other way have subfifted, but by the benefit, and fecurity of the Cessation.

HE told them, "that all this unjustifiable way of proceeding, though it had compell'd the King to yield to a Cessation, yet could not prevail with him to make a Peace with the Irish Rebels; from whom he had admitted Commissioners to attend him with propositions to that purpose; but that, when he found those Propositions and Demands sounreasonable, that he could not consent to them in Conscience, and that they were inconsistent with the security of his Protestant Subjects there, he had totally rejected them, and dismissed their Commissioners with severe and sharp Animadversions: yet that he had given his Lieutenant, and Council there, Authority to continue the Cessation longer, in hope that the Rebels there, might be reduced to better Temper; or that his Majesty might be enabled by a happy Peace here, which he hop'd this Treaty would produce, to chastise their odious and obstinate Rebellion: And if the Parliament would yet give his Majesty sufficient caution that "the War should be vigorously prosecuted there against the Irish, by sending over strong Supplies of Men and Money, "he would put an end to that Cessation without declaring it to be void; which otherwise he could not in Justice do, and the "doing whereof would be to no purpole.

THE Commissioners, visibly out of Countenance and Angry, made no other reply, but "that they were forry to find, that odious and detestable Rebellion had receiv'd so much "Grace, as that Commissioners from it had been admitted "into the King's Presence; and that they wonder'd, there " should be any scruple made of Declaring that Cessation void that was entred into expressly against the Letter of an Ad " of Parliament. This reply they gave in writing, with many pathetical expressions against the Murthers and Cruelties, the had been used in the beginning of that Rebellion; which obliged the King's Commissioners to a little more sharpned in their returns than they were inclined to; and to tell them That they wished it were in the King's Power to punish a Rebellion, with that severity that was due to it; but find "it was not fo, he must condescend to Treaties, and to a "other Expedients which are necessary to reduce his Subrejects who are in Rebellion, to return to their Duty and "Obedience.

THE nine first days were now spent upon the three gra heads, in which there was little advance made towards givin fatisfaction to either Party; for though, in the matter of Re ligion, the King's Commissioners had made such condescent tions, as would oblige Bishops to be more diligent in Pread ing, and to be themselves present in the administration of the most important parts of their Jurisdiction; yet no such Re formation was confiderable to those who cared for nothing without extirpation; and in neither of the other particular any ground had been gotten; and they were fenfible, that the matter of Ireland, the King's defence would weigh dow their Clamour and Calumny. There happen'd some Acc dents in this time of the Treaty, which made impression of each Party; the first was found in the looks of the Parliamen Commissioners, upon the Advertisement they received, the Str Lewis Dives, who was Governour of a small Garrison Sherborne in Dorfet-shire, had from thence, in a Night, upon Intelligence with the King's Governour of Portland Calle furprised Weymouth, a Sea-Port possessed by the Parliament which was like to be attended with great benefit to the

Bur whilst the King's Commissioners entertain'd some hope that this loss might have the more disposed the Parliament to a just Peace, they receiv'd Advertisement of a mad greater loss sustain'd by the King, and which was more like to exalt the other side. Colonel Langhorn, and Mitten, two very Active Officers in the Parliament Service, about Shrop shire and North Wales, by correspondence with some Townsmen, and some Soldiers in the Garrison of Shrewsbury, from whence too many of that Garrison were unhappily drawn out, two or three days before, upon some Expedition, seiled

The ofs of Shrewsbury was a great blow to the King, and streightm'd his Quarters exceedingly, and broke the secure Line of Communication with chefter, and exposed all North Wales, Hereford, and Worcesser, to the daily inroads of the Enemy: and the News of this, recover'd the dejected Spirits of the Par-iament Commissioners at Uxbridge.

YET there had been an odd Accident which accompanied he Enterprise upon Weymouth, which gave them afterwards nore trouble. Sr Lewis Dives had, in his March from Sherorne, intercepted a Packet of Letters sent out of Somersetbire to the Parliament; and among those, there was a Letter rom John Pyne, a Gentleman well known, and of a fair Estate in that Country, to Colonel Edward Popham, a prinipal Officer of the Parliament in their Fleets at Sea, and of a allionate and virulent Temper, of the Independent Party. The Subject of the Letter was a bitter invective against the Earl of Effex, and all those who advanced the Treaty of Peace, ind a great deteltation of the Peace, with very indecent exressions against the King himself, and all who adhered to him. This Letter had been fent by Sr Lewis Dives to one of the Secretaries at Oxford, and from Him to the Commissioners at Uxbridge; who, affoon as they received it, communicated it o some of those Commissioners, who they knew defired a Peace, and were very great Friends to the Earl of Effex. The Stots were likewise as much inveigh'd against as any Body else. They to whom this Letter was communicated, durft not undertake to appear to know any thing of it; but advised, that the Marquis of Hertford, might send a Copy of it to his Brother the Earl of Effex, with fuch reflections as He thought fit: which being done accordingly, the Earl of Effex, who was yet General, took it so much to heart that he defir'd the Marquis of Hertford would fend him the Original; which was prefently done; hoping that it would have even some Advantage to the Earl of Essex, towards whom the Parliament yet behav'd it felf with all imaginable decency and respect.

some of the Commissioners of both sides, who in private used their old freedom, made a great discovery of the Faction that was in the Parliament: that there were many who defir'd to have Peace, without any alteration in the Government, fo they might be fure of Indemnity, and fecurity for what was palt; that the Scots would infift upon the whole Government of the Church, and in all other Matters would defer to the King; but that there was another Party, that would have no Peace upon what condition foever, who did refolve to change the whole frame of the Government in State, as well a Church; which made a great Party in the Army; all those of the Parliament who defir'd to remove the Earl of Effex from being General of the Army, and to make another General, were of that Party. There was likewise, among the Commissioners themselves, very little Trust, and Communication; Sr Ham Vane, Saint-John, and Prideaux, being, upon the matter, but Spies upon the rest; and though most of the rest did heartily defire a Peace, even upon any Terms, yet none of them had the Courage to avow the receding from the most extravagan demand. Belides, there was reason enough to believe, that if the King had yielded to all that was then proposed, they would likewise have insisted upon all which they had for merly demanded, and upon the delivery up of all those Perfons who had faithfully ferv'd the King, and had been by them always excepted, as Persons never to be pardon'd.

FOR though they had affign'd those three General Heads of the Church, of the Militia, and of Ireland, to be first Treated upon, which were all plausible and popular Arguments, and in which they who most desir'd Peace, would insist at least up on many condescensions, yet they had not, in the least degree declin'd any other of their Propolitions; as the exemption of many of the greatest Quality, or of the most declared Affections to the King, in the three Nations of England, Scotland, and Ireland, from Pardon; and the making the Estates of the rest under the Name of Delinquents, liable to pay the Charges of the War; from which, or any of the other very unreasonable demands, the Houses had not in their Instructions given their Commissioners Authority, in the least particle to recede: They who defired Peace, being fatisfied, that they had prevailed to have a Treaty, which they imagin'd would do all the reft, and that these lesser demands, would fall off, of themselves, when fatisfaction should be given in those important particulars which more concern'd the publick; and, on the other fide, they who refolv'd the Treaty should be ineffectual, were well content, that their Commissioners should be instructed only to infift upon those three Generals, without power to depart from any one expression, in the Propositions concerning those ofo

particulars; being fatisfied, that in the particular which concern'd the Church, the scots would never depart from a tittle; and as fure, that the King would never yield to it; and that, in the Militia, they who most desired Peace, would adhere to that which most concern'd their own Security; and in the business of Ireland, besides the opportunity to asperse the King, upon an Argument in which the People generally concurr'd with them, they were fafe enough; except the King hould absolutely retract, and recant all that he had done, and by declaring the Cessation void, expose all those who had a hand in it, to Their censure, and judgement; and so dissolve ill the Authority he had in that Kingdom for the future; which they knew he would never do. So that they were fafe mough in those three heads of their Treaty, without bringng any of their other demands into Debate; which would have spent much time, and raised great difference in opinion mong them; yet they had those still in reserve, and might casonably conclude, that if the King satisfied them in the Terms of those three Propositions, he would never insist pon any of the rest; which could not relate so much to his Conscience, or his Honour, as the other. Besides, they knew rell, that, if, by the King's Condescensions, they had full tisfaction in the former Three, they who had most passion or Peace, would, for their own shares in the particular reenge upon those Men with whom they were angry enough nd in the preferments, which would be then in their dispohe never divide from them in any thing that remain'd to be emanded.

ONE Night, late, the Earl of Pembroke came to the Chanellor of the Exchequer's Lodging, to return him a vifit; and te with him some hours; all his discourse being to perswade im, to think it reasonable to consent to all that the Parliaent had demanded. He told him, "that there was never fuch a Pack of Knaves, and Villaines, as they who now govern'd in the Parliament; who would fo far prevail, if this Treaty were broke off, as to remove the Earl of Effex; and then they would constitute such an Army as should force the Parliament, as well as the King, to confent to whatfoever they demanded; which would end in the Change of the Government into a Common-wealth. The Chancelr told him, "if he believ'd That, it was high time for the Lords to look about them, who would be then no less concern'd than the King. He confessed it, and "that they were now fenfible, that they had brought this mischief upon themselves; and did heartily repent it, though too late; and when they were, in no degree, able to prevent the general destruction, which they foresaw: but, if the King would be Vol. II. Part 2.

" fo gracious to them, as to preferve them, by confenting to "those unreasonable Propolitions which were made by the " Parliament, the other wicked Persons would be disappointed "by fuch his concessions; the Earl of Essex would still keep "his power; and they should be able, in a short time after " the Peace concluded, by adhering to the King, whom they ce would never forfake hereafter, to recover all for him that he "now parted with, and to drive these wicked Men, who "would destroy Monarchy, out of the Kingdom; and then his Majesty would be greater than ever. How extravagant foever this discourse seems to be, the matter of it was the fame, which the wifelt of the rest, and there were Men of very good parts among them, did feriously urge to other of the King's Commissioners, with whom they had the same confidence: so broken they were in their Spirits, and so corrupted in their Understanding, even when they had their own ruin in their View.

THE Earl of Northumberland, who was the proudest Man alive, could not look upon the Destruction of Monarchy, and the contempt the Nobility was already reduced to, and which must be then encreased, with any pleasure: yet the repulse he had formerly received at Oxford, upon his Addresses thither, and the fair escape he had made afterwards from the jealousy of the Parliament, had wrought so far upon him, that he resolved no more to depend upon the one, or to provoke the other, and was willing to see the King's Power and Authority so much restrained, that he might not be able to do him any harm.

THE Earls of Pembroke, and Salisbury, were so totally without credit, or interest in the Parliament, or Country, that it was no matter which way Their inclinations or affections disposed them; and their Fear of the Faction that prevailed, was so much greater than their Hatred towards them, that though they wished They might rather be destroy'd than the King, they had rather the King and his Posterity should be destroy'd, than that Wilton should be taken from the one of them, or Hatfeild from the other; the preservation of both which from any danger, they both believ'd to be the highest point of prudence, and politick circumspection.

The Earl of Denbigh had much greater parts, and faw farther before him into the desperate designs of that Party that had then the power, than either of the other three, and detested those designs as much as any of them; yet the pride of his Nature, not inferior to the proudest, and the conscience of his Ingratitude to the King, in some respects superior to Theirs who had been most obliged, kept him from being willing to quit the Company with whom he had conversed too long

Though he had receiv'd from them most fignal Affronts and Indignities, and well knew he should never more be employ'd by them, yet he thought the King's condition to be utterly desperate, and that he would be at last compell'd to yield to work conditions than were now offer'd to Him. He conferr d with fo much freedom with one of the King's Commissioners, and spent so much time with him in the vacant hours, there having been formerly a great Friendthip between them, that he drew some jealousy upon himself from some of his Companions. With Him he lamented his own condition, and acknowledged his disloyalty to the King, with expressions of great compunction; and protested, "that he would most willingly redeem his Transgressions by any exattempt that might ferve the King fignally, though he were fure to lose his Life in it; but that to lose Himself, without any benefit to the King, would expose him to all milety; which he would decline, by not separating from his Party. He inform'd him more fully of the wicked purposes of those who then govern'd the Parliament, than others apprehended or imagin'd; and had a full prospect of the vile condition Himfelf, and all the Nobility should be reduced to; yet thought it impossible to prevent it, by any Authority of their own; and concluded, "that if any conjuncture fell out, in which, by losing his Life, he might preserve the King, he would embrace the Occasion; otherwise, he would shift the best "he could for himself.

Or the Commissioners of the House of Commons, though, the three named before being excepted, the rest did in their hearts delire a Peace, and upon much honester conditions than they durst own; yet there were not two of them who had entire confidence in each other, or who durit communicate their thoughts together: fo that though they could speak their minds freely enough, severally, to those Commissioners of the King's fide with whom they had former friendship, they would not, in the presence of any of their own Companions, use that freedom. The Debate that had been in the House upon the Self-denying Ordinance, had rais'd so many Jealoufies, and discomposed the confidence that had formerly been between many of them, that they knew not what any Man intended to do; many who had, from the beginning of the Troubles, professed to have most devotion for the Earl of Effex, and to abhor all his Enemies, had lately feem'd to concur in that Ordinance, which was contrived principally for his dishonour and destruction; and others who seem'd still to adhere to him, did it with so many cautions, that there could be no confidence of their perseverance.

Hollis, who was the frankest among them in owning Qq 2 his his Animolity and Indignation against all the Independent Party, and was no otherwise affected to the Presbyterians, than as they constituted a Party upon which he depended to oppose the other, did foresee that many of those who appear'd most resolute to concur with him, would, by degrees, fall from him purely for want of Courage, in which he abounded. Whitlock, who, from the beginning, had concurr'd with them without any Inclinations to their Persons, or their Principles, had the same reason still not to separate from them. All his Estate was in their Quarters, and he had a Nature that could not bear, or submit to be undone: though to his Friends, who were Commissioners for the King, he used his old openness, and professed his detestation of all the proceedings of his Party, yet could not leave them. Pierpoint, and Crew, who were both Men of great Fortubes, and had always been of the greatest moderation in their Counsels, and most sollicitous upon all opportunities for peace, appear'd now to have contracted more bitterness, and sourness than formerly; and were more referv'd towards the King's Commissioners, than was expected; and in all Conferences infisted peremptorily, " that the King must yield to whatsoever was requir'd in the three Demands, which had been Debated. They all valued themselves "upon having induced the Par-" liament, against all Opposition, to consent to a Treaty; "which producing no effect, they should hereafter have no er more credit; and it plainly appear'd, that they had perfwaded themselves, that, in the Treaty, they should be able to perswade the King's Commissioners to concur with them; and that the King would yield upon the very same argument, and expectation, that the Earl of Pembroke had offer'd to the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Some of them, who knew how impossible it was to prevail with the Commissioners, or, if They could be corrupted so far in their judgements, how much more impossible it would be to perswade the King to consent to what was so diametrically against his Conscience, and his Honour; and, in truth, against his Security, did wish, "that, to get the time "of the Treaty prolong'd, some Concessions might be made "in the point of the Militia, in order to their security; which being provided for, might probably take off many Persons, "who, out of that consideration principally, adhered to those who they thought were most jealous of it, and most solli"citous for it. This seem'd such an Expedient to those to whom they propos'd it, that they thought fit to make a Debate among all the Commissioners about it; "and if it should "produce no other effect, than the getting more days to the "Treaty, and making more Divisions in the Parliament, both which they might naturally expect from it, the benefit was "not small that would attend it; for, as long as the Treaty "lasted, there could be little advance made towards new mo-"delling the Army, the delay whereof would give the King "likewise more time to make his Preparations for the Field; "towards which he was in no forwardness. This consideration prevail'd with the Commissioners to send their opinion to the King, "that he would give them leave to propose, "when the next day came for the Debate of the point of the "Militia, that the whole Militia of the Kingdom should be "fettled in fuch a Number of Persons, for seven or eight "years, who might be all fworn to the observation of all the "Articles which should be agreed upon in the Treaty; after "the expiration of which time, which would be fufficient to "extinguish all jealousies, it should be restored to the King. And they fent the King a List of such Names, as they wish'd might be inferted in the Proposition, of Persons in Credit with the Parliament, to which his Majesty might add the like Number of fuch, of whose Fidelity he was most affured.

THE Earls of Effex, Northumberland, Warwick, and Manchefter, with Fairfax, and Cromwell, were among those they recommended to be named by the King. With this Mettage they fent two of their own Body, who added other reasons, which they conceiv'd might prevail with Him; and it was with great difficulty that his Majesty was prevailed with to confent, that fuch an Overture should be made. But being unwilling to diffent from his Commissioners judgement, and believing it would be rejected, and in hope that it would gain time by lengthning the Treaty, his Majesty was contented, that the Commissioners should make such an Offer as is mention'd, and name the Persons they had proposed of the Parliament Party; and withal, he feat a List of such Perfons as himself thought fit to trust in that Affair; in whom, together with the others, he would have the power of the Militia to be vested. But by this time, the Term assign'd for the Treaty drawing towards an end, they who had at first advised this Expedient, had not the same opinion of the success; and had plainly discover'd, that the Parliament would not confent to add one day more to the Treaty. So the farther profecution of the Overture in that manner was laid afide. For the King's Commissioners concluded, "that at this time "to offer any particular Names from the King to be trufted "with the Militia, was but to expose those Persons to re-"proach, as some of them were very ungracious and unpo-" pular to them; and to give the other fide an excuse for re-"jecting the offer, upon exception to their Persons. However, that they might fee a greater condescension from the Q93

King in that point, than he had ever yet been induced to, they offer'd, "that the Militia should be so settled for the "space of seven years, as they had desir'd, in such a Number "of Persons as should be agreed upon; a moiety of which "Persons, should be nominated by the King, and the other moiety by the Parliament: which was rejected by them with their usual neglect.

FROM this time the Commissioners, on both sides, grew more referved, and colder towards each other; informuch as in the last Conferences, the Answers and Replies upon one another, were sharper and more reflecting than they had formerly been: and in their Conference upon the last day, which held most part of the Night, it was evident, either fide labour'd most to make the other seem to be most in fault. The King's Commissioners deliver'd a Paper, which contain'd a Sum of all that had been done in the Treaty, and observed, "that after a War of fo many years, enter'd into, as was pre-"tended, for the Defence, and Vindication of the Laws of "the Land, and the Liberty of the Subject, in a Treaty of "twenty days, they had not demanded any one thing, that, "by the Law of the Land, they had the least Tide to de-"mand; but inlifted only on fach particulars as were against "Law, and the establish'd Government of the Kingdom; "and that much more had been offerd to them for the ob-"taining of Peace, than they could with justice or reason " require: with which they were fo offended, that they, for some time, refused to receive the Paper, upon pretence, "that "the time for the Treaty was expired; because it was then after twelve of the Clock of the Night of the twentieth day: but at last they were contented to receive it, finding, that it would not be less publick, and would more reflect upon them, if they rejected it: and so they parted a little before the break of day.

The end of the Treaty without effest.

The next day, being Sunday, they rested in the Town, that they might in the Asternoon decently take their leaves of each other; though Monday, according to the Letter of their Pass, was the last day of their freedom, and at that Season of the year their Journey to Oxford might require two days, as they had spent two days in coming thither; and the Commissioners for the Parliament, had given them a Paper in which they declar'd, "that they might safely make use of another day for their return, of which no Advantage should be taken. But they having on Sunday, perform'd their mutual Visits to each other, parted with such coolness towards each other, as if they scarce hoped to meet again; and the King's Commissioners were so unwilling to run any hazard, that they were on the Monday Morning so early in their

Coaches, that they came to Oxford that Night, and kiss'd the King's hand; who received them very graciously; thanking them for the pains they had taken. Surely the pains they had taken, with how little fuccess soever, was very great; and they who had been most inured to business, had not in their Lives ever undergone to great fatigue for twenty days together, as at that Treaty. The Commissioners seldom parted, during that whole time, till two or three of the Clock in the Morning. Befides, They were obliged to lit up later who were to prepare such Papers as were directed for the next day, and to write Letters to Oxford; so that, if the Treaty had continued much longer, it is very probable many of the Commissioners must have fallen fick for want of sleep; which some of them were not satisfied with in three or four days atter their return to Oxford. Thus ended the Treaty of Uxbridge, the particulars whereof were, by the King's Command, shortly after published in Print, and never contradicted by the Parliament.

THE King spoke to those he trusted most at that time, with much more Melancholy of his own Condition, and the State of his Affairs, than he had used to do. The loss of Shrewsbury was attended with many ill Consequences; and that which had feem'd to bring fome kind of recompence for it, the Surprise of Weymouth, prov'd but a Dream; for the Enemy had loft but one part of the Town, which they, in a thort time after, recover'd again by the usual Negligence of the King's Governours. So that his Majesty told them, "He found it absolutely necessary to pursue his former rele-"lution of separating the Prince his Son from himself, that "the Enemy might not, upon any Success, find them toge-"ther; which, he faid, would be ruin to them both; where-"as, though he should fall into their hands whilst his Son "was at liberty, they would not dare to do him harm. He icem'd to have very reasonable Apprehensions, that upon the loss of a Battle, he might become a Prisoner; but he never imagin'd, that it would enter into their thoughts to take away his Life; not that he believ'd they could be restrain'd from that Impious Act, by any remorfe of Conscience, or that they had not wickedness enough to design, and execute it: but he believ'd it against their Interest; and would often, in discourse, fay, "of what moment the preservation of his Life was to "the Rebels; and how much they were concern'd to pre-"ferve it, in regard, that if he Himfelf were dead, the Par-"liament stood dissolv'd; so that there would be an end of "their Government: which, though it were true in Law, would have little shaken their Power, of which they were too long poliefled to part with it easily.

THIS was a speculation of that Nature, that no body had reason to endeavour to change the King's opinion in that particular; and his Majesty thought of nothing so much as hastning the Prince's Journey; and to that purpose, commanded those who were appointed to attend him to be ready by a short day, resolving that his Highness should make his Journey directly to Briftol, and continue his residence there, till some emergent alteration should make his remove from thence necessary. For whatever discourse was made of raising an Army in the West, the King had no purpose to put the Prince into the head of any fuch Army; and though Goring had prevail'd to be fent, with a strong Party of Horse, and some Foot, into Hampsbire, upon pretence of securing the West from Waller's Incursion, and upon some other design; yet the King had not the least purpose, that he should be where the Prince was; though he was not himself without that defign at that prefent, as shall be made out anon, meaning by that device to withdraw himself from the command of Prince Rupert, which the King did not apprehend. But his Majesty having no more in his purpose than is said before, he fent the Lord Hopton to Briftol to provide a House for his Highness, and to put that City into as good a posture of Security for the Prince's residence, as was necessary; nor was there any other Strength delign'd to attend about his Highness's Person, than one Regiment of Horse, and one Regiment of Foot, for his Guards, both to be under the Command of the Lord Capel; who was likewise to raise them upon his own Credit and Interest; there being, at that time, not one Man raised of Horse or Foot, nor any means in view for the payment of them, when they should be raised; nor, indeed, for the support of the Prince's Family, or his Person. In so great scarcity, and poverty, was the King himself, and his Court at Oxford.

THERE happen'd an Accident at this time, that reconcil'd the minds of many to this Journey of the Prince into the West, and look'd like a good Omen that it would produce good effects; though it prov'd afterwards an occasion of much trouble and inconvenience. When the King return'd through Somerset-shire, after the Defeat of the Earl of Essex in Cornwal, there had been a Petition deliver'd to him, in the Names of the Gentry, Clergy, Freeholders, and others his Majesty's Protestant Subjects of the County of Somerset, in which they desir'd, "that his Majesty would give them leave to Petition "the Parliament, that there might be a Treaty for Peace; "and that they might have liberty to wait upon his Majesty "in Person in his march; and that when they came to a "nearer distance, they might then go before, and deliver their Petition; and if they should not obtain their so just Request, they would then assist his Majesty to get that by the Sword, which could be obtained no other way. To that purpose, they desired leave "to put themselves in Armes, to attend his Majesty in the Journey. This Petition, how indigested, or impracticable soever in the manner, and way proposed, was contrived by some Persons of unquestionable Fidelity to the King; who thought, that under this specious Title of Petitioners for Peace, they might draw even that whole Populous County to appear for the King; and therefore the King gave them a gracious reception, and liberty to do all that they desired; believing it possible, that he might even from thence recruit his Foot; which he most desired. But his Majesty's speedy march, left that design to be better

Upon the first Fame of the Prince's being to visit the West, and to keep his Court there, some Gentlemen, of the best Quality in the West, came to Oxford, as entrusted by the rest to acquaint his Majesty, "that they had now form'd the Defign, they had formerly prefented to him, much better than it was; and that the four Western Counties, Dorfet, Somerset, Devon, and Cornwal, had resolv'd to enter into an Affociation, and to be joynt Petitioners to the Parliament for Peace; and that their Petition should be fent by very many thousands of the most substantial Freeholders of the feveral Counties, who should have Money enough in their Purses to defray their Charges, going and returning; and whosoever refused to joyn in the Petition, should be look'd upon as Enemies to Peace and their Country, and accordingly treated; fo that this Address could not but have great influence upon the Parliament, being under the Style of One and All; and could not but be look'd upon as fuch. They desir'd the King, "that the Prince might be made General of this Affociation; in order to which, they would provide for his support according to his Dignity; "and, in the first place, take care for the raising a good Guard " of Horse and Foot, for the safety of his Person.

Though this design, in the Notions thereof, was as unpracticable as the former, yet his Majesty thought not fit to discountenance, and reject it. It was very vehemently pressed by many Persons of Quality, in the name of the sour Western Counties, and among those who took it most to heart, Sr John Stawel was the Chief; a Gentleman of one of the largest Estates, that any Man possessed in the West, who had, from the beginning of the Parliament, shew'd very great Affection to the Person of the King, and to the Government that was settled, both in Church and State; and from the beginning of the War had engaged both his own Person and his two Sons, in the most active part of it, with fingular Courage; and had render'd himself as odious to the Parliament, as any Man of that condition had done. This Gentleman was affilted, and counfell'd by Mr Fountain, a Lawyer of Eminency, who had been imprison'd, and banish'd London, for his declar'd Affection to the Crown; and they two had first entertain'd and form'd this project in their own thought, and then, upon the communication of it with fome Gentle men, and more of the Farmers, and Freeholders of the County, found fuch a general concurrence with them, that the concluded it could not but have good Success, and would bring the Parliament to be glad of Peace. They were both very tenacious of what they had once refolv'd, and believ'd all who objected against their undertaking to be averse from Peace; so that the King concluded, that he would so far comply with them, as to make the Prince General of their Allo ciation; which he was fure could do no harm; and they were to much delighted with the condescension, that they promise speedily to make Provision for the Prince's support, and to the raising his Guards of Horse and Foot; and to that put pole made hast to Bristol, that all things might be ready against the Prince came thither.

The Prince of Wales made General of the

UPON these reasons, the Prince had two Commission granted to him; one, to be General of the Affociation; and another, to be General of all the King's Forces in England For when the King declar'd his Nephew Prince Rupert to be Forces, and General, in the place of the Earl of Brentford, his Highney of the west- desir'd, "that there might be no General in England but the em Mocia- ce Prince of Wales, and that he might receive his Commission "from Him; which his Majesty took well; and so that Commission of Generalissimo was likewise given to the Prince when in truth it was refolv'd he should Act no part in either but remain quiet in Bristol, till the fate of all Armies could be better discern'd.

THE Indisposition and Melancholy which possessed the Court at Oxford, and all the King's Party, was preserv'd from despair, only by the extraordinary Discontents and Animolities in the Parliament; which kept them from pursuing the advantages they had had by united Counfels. Affoon as the Commilmoners were return'd from Uxbridge, and that a Treaty could be now no farther urged, the Independent Party (for so the were now contented to be call'd, in opposition to the other which was styl'd Presbyterian) appear'd bare-faced, and ye goroully pressed on their Self-denying Ordinance, that so they might proceed towards modelling their new Army, by pulting out the old Officers; during the suspension whereof, there III.

They were now enr'd into the Month of Merch, which was used as a strong rgument by both Parties, the one urging, "from the Season of the year, the necessity of expediting their resolution for the passing the Ordinance, that the Army might be put into a posture of marching; the other pressing, "that so great an Alteration ought not to be attempted, when there was to thort a time to make it in: That there would be apparent danger, that the Enemy would find them, without any Army at all fit to take the Field; and therefore defird, "that all things might stand as they were, till the end of the next Campagne; when, if they faw cause, they might resume this Expedient. The other Party were loud against the dey; and faid, "that was the way to make the War last; for managed as it had been, they should be found at the end of the next Campagne in the same posture they were now in; whereas they made no doubt but, if this Ordinance was pass'd, they should proceed so vigorously, that the next Campagne should put an end to the War.

THE Debate continued many days in the House of Comons, with much passion, and sharp reflections upon Things, nd Persons; whilst the House of Peers look'd on, and attendthe resolution below. Of the Presbyterian Party, which fionately opposed the Ordinance, the chief were, Hollis, apleton, Glin, Waller, Long, and others, who believ'd their arty much Superior in Number; as the Independent Party as led by Nathaniel Fiennes, Vane, Cromwell, Hasterig, Mar-, and others; who spoke more and warmer than they that pposed them. WHEN the Debate grew ripe, Saint-John, Pierpoint, White lock, and Crew, who had been thought to be of the Party the Earl of Effex, appear'd for passing the Ordinance, as the only way to unite their Counsels, and to relist the Commo Enemy; saying, "they discover'd by what they heard abroa " and by the Spirit that govern'd in the City, that there would " be a general diffatisfaction in the People, if this Ordinand "were not passed. Then they fell into a high Admiration of the Earl of Effex, extolling his great merit, and feem'd fear, "that the War would never be carried on so happily, "it had been under Him; or if it were, that the good find cess must be still imputed to his Conduct, and Courage "which had form'd their Armies, and taught them to Fig By this kind of Oratory, and professing to decline their on inclinations and wishes, purely for Peace and Unity, they where no body imagin'd it would ever pass.

AFTER the Battle at York, and that the Earl of Manchell was requir'd to march with his Army against the King, up the defeat of the Earl of Effex in Cornwal, the Scotilb Am march'd Northward, to reduce the little Garrisons remain ing in those parts; which was easily done. After which the march'd to New-Cafele; which, being defended only by Townsmen, and in no degree fortified for a Siege, was give up to them, after as good a refistance as could be made in in a place, and by fuch People. So that they having no mo to do in those parts, the Parliament thought not fit hower to difmiss them to return into their own Country, not know ing yet, how far their new modell'd Army would be able carry on all their defigns. And therefore the Scotish Army w again advanced as far as Tork, and was to be applied as the should be occasion.

An account

THE King had formerly, towards the end of the year for of the Earl three, consider'd how to give such a disturbance to Su of Mountained, as might oblige their Army to stay at home to quench trose's Ex- land, as might oblige their Army to stay at home to quench pedition into Fire in their own Country; but all the Advance, which ha Scotland. been made towards the execution of that delign, in the Con ferences with the Earl of Mountrofe and in the Commitment of Duke Hamilton, had been check'd for some time, by the King's not being able to give any Troops to the Earl, by might come to his Affiftance, and discover their Affection his Majesty. Protestant Quarters, and from thence into England, and for Oxford; where his Wife then was; and made his prefence no unacceptable; the King not having then notice of his having ever been among the Irifh Rebels; but he pretended to he great credit and power in Ireland to ferve the King, and dispose the Irish to a Peace, if he should have any countenand from the King; which his Majesty knew him too well think him capable of. Whether the Earl of Antrim had h original Extraction in Scotland, or the Marquis of Argyle ! in Ireland, must be left to the determination of those that a skill'd in the Genealogy of the Family of the Macdonnels; the superiority whereof they both pretend; and the Early Antrim, to much of those Lands in the Highlands of & land, which were possessed by Argyle; and the greatest pe of his Estate in Ireland was in that part of Ulfter that lies no Scotland, and his Dependents near of the same Language, a manner of living with the Highlanders of Scotland. The know ledge of this, disposed the Earl of Mountrese to make a gre acquaintance with him affoon as he came to Oxford, and confult with him, whether it might not be possible to da a Body of Men out of Ireland to be such a foundation in raining Forces in Scotland, as might advance the Enterprife had so long in his heart; it being notorious enough that the Highlanders in Scotland had very good Affections for in King; and defir'd nothing more than to free themselves for the hard flavery, they had long endur'd under the Tyranny Argyle. The passage over the Sea in those places, between Scotland and Ireland, is so narrow, that the People often mi their Markets in one and the other, in the space of few hour and the hardiness of both People is such, that they have n delight in the superfluity of diet, or cloathing, or the great con modity of Lodging; and were very fit to constitute an Am that was not to depend upon any Supplies of Money, Armes, or Victual, but what they could eafily provide it themselves, by the dexterity that is universally practiced those parts.

THE Earl of Antrim, who was naturally a great Under taker, and defired nothing so much, as that the King should believe him to be a Man of interest and power in Ireland, we highly exalted, when he discover'd by the Earl of Mountrost that he was thought to have credit enough in that part of Ireland, to perform a Service for the King, which he never be fore entertain'd a thought of. When the Earl of Mountrofe had form'd uch a reasonable undertaking, ashe believ'd the Earl of Anrim might in truth be able to comply with, he acquainted he Lord Digby with it, who was a friend to all difficult degns, and defired him "to propose it to the King, and to let his Majesty know, that he was so confident of the Earl of Antrin's being able to perform what should be necessary (for he would be very well content, if he would fend over a Body but of two thousand Men into Scotland, which he well knew he could eafily do) that he would himself be in the Highlands to receive them; and to run his fortune with them; if his Majesty would give him leave to gather up fuch a Number of his Country-men about Oxford, as would be willing to accompany him; with whom he would make his way thither; and that, if no time were lost in profecuting this defign, he did hope that by the time the Scotist Army should be ready to take the Field, they should receive fuch an Alarm from their own Country, as should hinder their advance.

Upon this Overture, the King conferr'd with the two Earls together; and finding the Earl of Antrim forward to indertake the raising as many Men as should be desired, if he might have the King's Commission to that purpose; and knowng well, that he had, in that part of the Kingdom, Interest mough to do it; and the Earl of Mountrofe as confidently afuring his Majesty, " that with two thousand Men Landed in the Highlands, he would quickly raile an Army, with which he could diffuset that Kingdom; and the delign being more probable, than any other that could be proposed to the same purpose, his Majesty resolv'd to encourage it all he could, that s, to give it countenance; for he had neither Money, nor Armes, nor Ammunition, to contribute to it in any degree. The great objection, that appear dat the first entrance into it, was, "that though the Earl of Antrim had power in Ulster, "and among the Roman Catholicks, he was very odious to "the Protestants, and obnoxious to the State at Dublin, many "things being discover'd against him of his correspondence with the Rebels, which were not known when he came into " England. But that which gave most Umbrage (for no body suspected his conjunction with the Rebels) was his declard "Malice to the Lord Lieutenant, the Marquis of Ormond, "and the contempt the Marquis had of him, who would there-"fore undervalue any Proposition should be made by him, be-"ing a Man of so notorious a levity and inconstancy, that "he did not use to intend the same thing long. "the Marquis of Ormond, or allowing him to do any thing in "Ireland without the Marquis's Privity, and fuch a limitation would by no means be grateful to him. And though the he conefit, the King's Friends in Scotland would receive by the et carrying away any Body of Men out of Ulfter, would be e great lessening and abatement of the strength of the Iril "Rebels, who had the Command over those parts, yet if the Earl of Antrim, under any Authority from the King, should "indifcreetly behave himself (as no Man who lov'd him belt "had any confidence in his discretion) all the reproaches call upon his Majesty, of his countenancing those Rebels, would " receive the greatest confirmation imaginable.

THE forelight of these difficulties gave life to an Intrigue in the Court, which for some time had not succeeded. Daniel O Neile (who was in fubtlety and understanding much fups rior to the whole Nation of the old Irish) had long labour to be of the Bed-Chamber to the King. He was very well known to the Court, having spent many years between the and the Low Countries, the Winter Season in the one, and the Summer always in the Army in the other; as good a Education towards advancement in the World, as that Age He had a fair Reputation in both Climates, having competent Fortune of his own, to support himself without dependence, and a natural Infinuation, and Address, which made him acceptable in the best Company. He was a great observer, and discerner of Mens Natures and Humours, and was very dexterous in complyance where he found it useful Affoon as the Troubles begun in Scotland, he had, with the first, the Command of a Troop of Horse; to which he was by all Men held very equal; having had good experience is the most active Armies of that time, and a Courage very notorious. And though his inclinations were naturally to east and luxury, his industry was indefatigable, when his Honour required it, or his particular Interest, which he was never without, and to which he was very indulgent, made it necesfary or convenient.

In the fecond Troubles in Scotland, he had a greater Command, and some part in most of the Intrigues of the Court, and was in great confidence with those who most defign'd the destruction of the Earl of Strafford; against whom he had contracted fome, prejudice in the behalf of his Nation; yet when the Parliament grew too imperious, he enter'd very frankly into those new deligns, which were contrived at Court, with less circumspection than both the Season, and the weight of the Affair required. And in this Combination, in which Men were most concern'd for themselves, and to receive good recompence for the Adventures they made, he ng in

had either been promis'd, or at least encourag'd by the Oueen to hope to be made Groom of the Bed-chamber, when a vacancy should happen. When the Civil War begun, he, being then in the Low Countries, having made an escape out of the Tower, where he flood committed by the Parliament upon a Charge of High Treason, chose rather to be Lieutenant Colonel of Horse to Prince Rupert, than the Name of a greater Officer, which he might well have pretended to; prefuming that, by his dexterity, he should have such an Interest in that young Prince, as might make his relation to him Superior to those who had greater Titles. He had the missortune, at the first coming of the Prince, to have credit with him to make fome impressions, and prejudices, which he would have been glad afterwards to have removed, when he saw others had credit likewise to build upon those Foundations, which he hoped to have had the fole Authority to have supervised, and directed. When he saw some of his Fraternity promoted to Offices and Honours, who had not ventured, or fuffer'd more than He (for if he had not made his escape out of the Tower very dextroully, in a Ladies dress, he had been in manifest danger of his Life) and whose pretences were not better founded, than upon the promises made at the same time, when he had promifed himself to be of the Bed-Chamber, he now pressed likewise to be admitted into that attendance; and the Queen had been very follickous with the King on his behalf. being conscious to her self, that he had been encouraged by Her to hope it. But the King could by no means be prevailed with to receive him, having contracted a prejudice against him with reference to the Earl of Strafford, or upon some other reason, which could not be removed by all his Friends, or by the Queen her felf; who therefore bid him expect a better conjuncture. This, O Neile took very heavily; and the more, because his condition in the Army was less pleasant to him, by Prince Rupert's withdrawing his Graces from him.

THE defign of the Earls of Mountrose and Antrim, which was yet wholely managed with the King by the Lord Digby, who was likewise of intimate Friendship with O Neile, gave him opportunity to let this pretence again on foot. It was generally known that O Neile, whether by Alliance, or Friend-ship, or long acquaintance, had more power with the Earl of Antrim than any Man; and that by the ascendant he had in his understanding, and the dexterity of his Nature, in which he was Superior to most Men, he could perswade him very much; and it was as notorious, that the Marquis of Ormand lov'd o Neile very well, and had much efteem for him. Upon this ground the Lord Digby told the King, "that he had thought of an expedient, which he did believe might relieve Vol. II. Part 2.

"and his fingular Address, would easily bring to pass. THIS Proposition was very agreeable to the King, who knew O Neile was equal to this business; and the Lord Digh did not in the least infinuate any defign for O Neile's advantage in the Service, which would have diverted the Negotiation: thereupon his Majesty himself spoke to him of the whole defign, the Lord Digby defiring he would do so, pretending that he had not communicated any part of it to him, being not fure of his Majelty's Approbation. He received it ass thing he had never thought of; and when the King asked him, "whether he thought the Earl had interest enough in "those parts of Ireland, to Levy and Transport a Body of "Men into the Highlands? he Answer'd readily, " that he « knew well, that there were so many there, where the Earl's "Estate lay, who depended absolutely upon him, that there would be Men enough ready to go thither, or do what he " required them: and that the Men were hardy and flout for any Service: but the drawing a Body of them together, and "Transporting them, would require, he doubted, more power "than the Earl himself had, or could be Master of. He said there were two Objections in view, and a third, that he was not willing, for many reasons, to make. The first was c that nothing of that Nature could be done without the Auet thority and Power of the Marquis of Ormond, which, no "doubt, would be applied to any purpose his Majesty should "direct; yet that the Earl of Antrim had behav'd himself so c indifcreetly towards the Marquis, and fo unhandfomly difcobliged him, that it could not but be the feverest Command " his Majesty could lay upon the Marquis, to enter into any kind of conjunction, or conversation with that Earl. "many Men as he defired, to enter into any Action of Engagement he would prescribe, he much doubted the Irish Commander in Chief, who had the Military power of those parts, would hardly permit a Body of those Men, which they reckon'd their best Soldiers, to be Transported; and thereby their own strength to be lessen'd; which was an objection of Weight; and not mention'd before to the King, nor consider'd by him. He said, "he was unwilling to make another objection, which resected upon a Person so dear to him, and for whom he would at any time lay down his Life; which was, that he much fear'd the Earl of Antrim had not stream the same stream of the mind enough to go through with such an Undertaking, which otherwise would be as easy as honour-

THE King, well satisfied with the Discourse he made, told him, "that he was not Himself without the same apprehen-"fions he had, and knew but one way to fecure the bufiness, if he would undertake the Journey with him, by which all his fears would be compos'd; His Counsel would govern the Earl in all things, and his credit with the Marquis of Or-"mond, which should be improved by his Majesty's recom-"mendation, would prevent any prejudice in him towards the Earl. The King added, "that the Service it felf was of fo vast importance, that it might preserve his Crown, and therefore his conducting it, without which he law little hope of Success, would be a matter of great merit, and could not be unrewarded. O Neile feem'd wonderfully furpris'd with the Proposition, and in some disorder (which he could handfomly put on when he would) faid, "that he would never disobey any Command his Majesty, would positively lay upon him; but that he should look upon it as the greatest "misfortune that could befal him, to receive fuch a Com-" mand, as would deprive him of attending upon his Majesty in the next Campagne, where he was fure there must be a Battle; from which he had rather lose his life than be ab-"fent. Then he faid, "though the Earl of Antrim was his "Kinsman, and his Friend, and one who, he thought, lov'd him better than he did any other Man, yet he was the last "Man in England with whom he would be willing to joyn "in any Enterprise; mentioning his Pride, and Levity, and Weakness, and many Infirmities, which made it appear more requifite, that a Wifer Man should have the application of his Interest; which he knew must be himself. renew'd his defire to him, to undertake the Service, as the greatest he could perform for him; and commanded him to confer with the Lord Digby, who should inform him of all particulars, and should find the best way to make the Earl of Rr2 Antrim

Antrim to communicate the Affair to him, and to wish his Afsistance; which was easily brought to pass; nor was there any thing relating to it that the Lord Digby had not before inparted to him; though the King suspected it not.

THE Lord Digby had now brought the bufiness to the ftate he wish'd; and, within two or three days, told the King "how glad the Earl of Antrim was, that he had leave to a communicate the matter with O Neile; and defired nothing "more than that his Majesty would command him to go over with him; which was an excellent point gained, wherein "he had himself chosen the Person, who was only fit to be with him, whereas he might have been jealous, if he had been first recommended to him. The Earl had, upon the "first mention of him, taken Notice of the Difficulty he might find to draw his Men out of the Irish Quarters, by "the opposition of those who Commanded there in chief wbut, he faid, if the King would make O Neile go with him all that difficulty would be removed; for Owen O Neile who was Uncle to Daniel, was the General of all the Iribin "Ulfter, and incomparably the best Soldier, and the Wise "Man that was among the Irish Rebels, having long fervi the King of Spain in Flanders in very eminent Command "and the Earl faid, that he was fure Daniel had that cred with his Uncle, that he would not refuse at his request, to "connive at what was necessary for the Earl to do, which "was all he defir d." Though

THE Lord Digby left not this circumstance, which he pretended never to have thought of before, unobserv'd, to a vance the Counsel he had given for employing O Neile; whom be rook occasion then to Magnify again; and told the King "that he had already convenced the Earl of Antrim, of the cofolly of defiring any other Commission, than what the Marcons of Ormand thould find necessary to give him; and how " impossible it was for him to have any success in that de figh, without the chearful concurrence, and friendship of the Marquis: which the Earl was now brought to confess and folemaly promifed to do all he should be advised, to compass it. But after all this, he lamented CO Neile's ob-"Itinate aversion to undertake the Journey, for many reasons; who, he faid, had engaged him, under all the obligation "of the Friendship that was between them, to prevail with this Majesty, that he might not be absent from his charge in the Army, in a Season when there must be so much Action, "and when his Majesty's Person, whom he so dearly love, "must be in so great danger; and that he had told him free "ly, that he could not honeftly move his Majesty to that "purpose, whom he knew to be possessed of the necessity of his going into Ireland with the Earl, that he should despair of the whole Enterprise, which was the most hope-"ful he had in his view, if he did not chearfully submit to "act his part towards it: but that notwithstanding all he had faid, by which he had shut out all farther importunity towards himself, his Majesty must expect to be very much "struggled with; and that O Neile would lay himself at his feet, and get all his Friends to joyn with him in a fupplication for his Majesty's excuse; and that there was no more to be done, but that his Majelty, with some warmth, should Command him to delift from farther importunity, and to comply with what he should expect from him; which, he faid, he knew would filence all farther opposition: for that O Neile had that entire refignation to his Majesty's pleasure, that he would rather dye than offend him. Upon which, and to cut off all farther Mediation, and Interpolition, the King presently sent for him, and graciously conjur'd him, with s much passion as he could shew, "to give over all thoughts of excuse, and to provide for his Journey within three or four days.

ALL things being thus disposed, and the King expecting very day that the Earl and O Neile would take their leaves, he Lord Digby came to him, and said, "Mr O Neile, had an humble Suite to his Majesty at parting; which to him did not feem unreasonable, and therefore he hoped his Majesty would raise the Spirits of the poor Man, since he did believe in his Conscience, that he defir'd it more for the advancement of his Majesty's Service, than to satisfy his own Ambition. He put him in mind of the "long pretence he had to be Groom of his Bed-Chamber, for the which he could not choose but say, that he had the Queen's promise, at the same time when Piercy, and Wilmot had the like for their Honours, which they had fince received the accom-plishment of; That his Majesty had not yet rejected the Suite, but only deferr'd the granting it; not without giving him leave in due time to hope it: That there could not be to proper a Scason as this, for his Majesty to confer this Grace: That Mr O Neile was without a Rival, and, in the Eyes of all Men, equal to his pretence; and so no Man could be offended at the Success: That he was now upon an employment of great Trust, chosen by his Majesty as the only Person who could bring an Enterprise of that valt expectation to a good end, by his Conduct and Dexterity: That it must be a Journey of great expence, belides the hazard of it; yet he ask'd no Money, because he knew there was none to be had; he begged only, that he might depart with such a Character, and Teltimony of his Ma-Rr 3 " jetty s

"jesty's favour and good opinion, that he might be thereby the better qualified to perform the trust that was reposed in him: That the conferring this Honour upon him, at this time, would encrease the Credit he had with the Earl of Antrim, at least confirm his unconstant Nature, in an ab folute considence in him: It would make him more considerable to the Marquis of Ormond, and the Council there, with whom he might have occasion often to confer about his Majesty's Service; but above all, it would give him that Authority over his Country-men, and would be such an obligation upon the whole Irish Nation (there having newer yet been any Irish-man admitted to a place so near the Person of the King) that it might produce unexpected effects, and could not fail of disposing Owen O Neile, the General, to hearken to any thing his Nephew should ask of him.

How much reason soever this discourse carried with it with all the infinuations a very powerful Speaker could add to it in the delivery, the Lord Digby found an aversion, and weariness in the King all the time he was speaking; and therefore, as his last effort, and with a Countenance as it he thought his Majesty much in the wrong, he concluded, "that "he doubted his Majesty would too late repent his avertion "in this particular; and that Men ought not to be lent upon "fuch Errands, with the sharp sense of any disobligation; "That if his Majesty pleased, he might settle this Affair in " fuch a manner as O Neile might go away very well pleated, "and his Majesty enjoy the greatest part of his resolution: "That O Neile should not be yet in so near an attendance "about his Person: That the Employment was full of hazard, "and would require a great expence of time: That he was a "Man of that Nature, as would not leave his business half "done, and would be ashamed to see his Majesty's face, be-" fore there were some very considerable effect of his Acti-"vity and Industry; and considering what was to be done in " Ireland; and the posture of Affairs in England, it might be "a very long time before O Neile might find himself again in "the King's presence, to enter upon his Office in the Bed-"Chamber; and therefore proposed, "that the hour he was "to leave Oxford, he might be sworn Groom of the Bed-"Chamber; by which he should depart only with a Title, "the effect whereof he should not be possessed of, before no "had very well deferv'd it, and return'd again to his Ma-" jesty's presence; which, possibly, might require more time "than the other had to live. This last prevail'd more than all the rest, and the imagination that the other might be well fatisfied with a place he should never enjoy, made his Majelty confent, consent, that, in the last Article of time, he should be sworn before his departure; with which the other was well satisfied, making little doubt but that he should be able to dispatch hat part of the business which was incumbent on him, in o short a time, as he might return to his attendance in the Bed-Chamber (where he longed to be) sooner than the King expected; which fell out accordingly, for he was again with his Majesty in the Summer following, which was that of

Jent,

WHILST this Intrigue was carrying on for Mr O Neile, here was another, as unacceptable, fet on foot on the behalf of the Earl of Antrim; for whose Person the King had as ittle regard or kindness, as for any Man of his rank. The Dutchess of Bucking bam, his Wife, was now in Oxford, whom he King always heard with favour; his Majesty retaining a nost gracious memory of her former Husband, whom, He hought, she had forgotten too soon. This Lady, being of a reat Wit and Spirit, when the found that the King now hought her Husband good for somewhat, which he had neer before done, was refolv'd he should carry with him some estimony of the King's esteem; which, she thought, would e at least some justification of the Affection she had maniefted for him. She told the King, "that her Husband was to eclipsed in Ireland, by the no-countenance his Majesty had ever shew'd towards him, and by his preferring some who were his equals, to degrees and trults above him, and by raising others, who were in all respects much inferior to him, to the same Title with him, and to Authority above him, that she believ'd he had not Credit and Interest enough to do the Service he defir'd to do: That, in that Country, the Lords and Greatest Men had Reputation over their Tenants and Vassals, as they were known to have Grace from the King; and when they were known to be without that, they had no more power than to exact their own just Services. She lamented "the misfortune of her Husband, which she had the more reason to do, because it proceeded from Her; and that, whereas he had reason to have expected, that, by his Marriage with her, he might have been advanced in the Court, and in his Majesty's favour, he had found so little benefit from thence, that he might well believe, as She did, that he fuffer'd for it: Otherwise, it would not have been possible for a Person of the Earl of "Antrim's Estate, and Interest, and so well qualified, as she "had reason to believe him to be in all respects, after the "expence of so much Money in attendance upon the Court, "to be without any mark or evidence of his Majesty's favour; "and to return now again in the same forlorn Condition into " Ireland, Rr4

"Ireland, would but give his Enemies more encouragement to infult over him, and to cross any designs he had to add vance his Majesty's Service. In Conclusion she desired, that the King would make her Husband a Marquis; without which, she did as good as declare, that he should not undertake that Employment. Though his Majesty was neither pleased with the matter, nor the manner, he did not discens so great an inconvenience in the gratifying him, as might weigh down the benefit he expected with reference to scotland; which the Earl of Mountrose, every day, with great earnestness, put him in mind of. Thereupon, he gave Order for a Warrant to make the Earl of Antrim a Marquis.

The Earl of So He and O Neile, being well pleased, begun their JourMountrose ney for Ireland; and at the same time the Earl of Mountrose goes pritook his leave of the King with several Gentlemen, as if they wately into Scotland, meant to make their way together into Scotland. But the Army; and three days in that Equipage, which he knew could be no se bas great cret, and that it would draw the Enemies Troops together for success.

cret, and that it would draw the Enemies Troops together for the Guard of all Passes to meet with him, was found missing one Morning by his Company; who, after some stay and enquiry, return'd back to Oxford, whilst that Noble Person, with incredible Address and Fatigue, had not only quitted his Company, and his Servants, but his Horfe also, and found a fafe paffage, for the most part, on foot, through all the Enemies Quarters, till he came to the very Borders; from whence, by the affiftance of Friends whom he trufted, he found himself secure in the Highlands, where he lay quid without undertaking any Action, until the Marquis of Antrin by the Countenance and Affiltance of the Marquis of Ormond, did make good fo much of his undertaking, that he fent over Alexander Macdonnel, a stout and an active Officer (whom they call'd by an Irish appellation Calkito) with a Regiment of fifteen hundred Soldiers; who Landed in the Highlands in Scotland, at, or near the place that had been agreed on, and where the Earl of Mountrofe was ready to receive them; which he did with great joy; and quickly publish'd his Commission of being General for the King over all that King With this handful of Men brought together with thole circumstances remember'd, he brought in so many of his own Country-men to joyn with him, as were strong enough to Arm themselves at the Charge of their Enemies; whom they first Defeated; and every day encreased in power, till he Fought, and prevail'd in so many several Battles, that he made himself, upon the matter, master of the Kingdom; and did all those stupendous Acts, which deservedly are the Subject of a History by it felf, excellently written in Latin by Learned ment Learned Prelate of that Nation. And this preamble to that History was not improper for this relation, being made up of many secret passages known to sew; in which the Artifices of Court were very notable, and as mysterious as the Motions in that Sphere use to be. There will be hereafter occasion, before the conclusion of our History, to mention that Noble Lord again, and his Zeal for the Crown, before he came to his sad Catastrophe.

THE King now found, that, notwithstanding all the divifions in the Parliament, and the factions in the City, there would be an Army ready to march against him before he could put himself into a posture ready to receive it; and was therefore the more impatient that the Prince should leave Oxford, and begin his Journey to Bristol; which he did within a fortnight after the expiration of the Treaty at Uxbridge. And ince the King did at that time, within himself (for publickly he was contented that it should be otherwise believ'd) resolve that the Prince should only keep his Court in the West, that they might be separated from each other, without engaging himself in any Martial Action, or being so much as present in any Army, it had been very happy, and, to discerning Men, feem'd then a thing defirable, if his Majesty had remov'd his Court into the West too, either to Bristol, or, which it may be had been better, to Exeter. For fince Reading and Abingdon were both possessed by the Parliament, and thereby Oxford become the head Quarter, it was not so fit that the Court should remain there; which, by the multitude of Ladies, and Persons of Quality, who resided there, would not probably endure such an Attack of the Enemy, as the Situation of the place, and the good Fortifications which inclosed 1, might very well bear. Nor would the Enemy have fate down before it, till they had done their business in all other places, if they had not prefum'd, that the Inhabitants within, would not be willing to submit to any notable distress. If, at this time, a good Garrison had only been left there, and all the Court, and Persons of Quality, remov'd into the West with the Prince, it would probably have been a means speedily to have reduced to the King's Obedience those small Garrisons, which stood out; and the King himself might, by the Spring, have been able to have carried a good recruit of Men to his Army, and might likewise have made Oxford the place of Rendezvous, at the time when it should be fit for him to take the Field. But the truth is, not only the Ladies, who were very powerful in fuch confultations of State, but very few of the rest, of what Degree, or Quality foever, who had excellent Accommodations in the Colleges, which they could not have found any where elfe, would, without, extreme murmuring, have been content content to have chang'd their Quarters. Besides, the King had that Royal Affection for the University, that he thought it well deserv'd the honour of his own Presence; and always resolv'd, that it should be never so expos'd to the extremity of War, as to fall into those barbarous hands, without making all necessary Conditions for the preservation of so Venerable 2

place from Rapine, Sacrilege, and destruction.

THUS that confideration of removing the Court from thence, was only fecretly enter'd upon, and laid afide, without making it the subject of any Publick Debate: and since the other could not have been effected, it had been well if the whole Council which was affign'd to attend the Prince, had been obliged to have perform'd that Service. But both the Duke of Richmond, and the Earl of Southampton, Men of great Reputation and Authority, excus'd themselves to the King, for not submitting to that his Command, and for desiring to continue still about his Person; the one thinking it some diminution to his greatness to be at any distance from his Majesty; to whom he had adher'd with that fignal Fidelity and Affection, when so many had deserted him; the other being newly Married, and engaged in a Family, which he could not, without great inconveniencies, have left behind him; nor without more have carried with him. Nor was the King diffcult in admitting their excuses, having named them rather to obviate some jealousies, which were like to be entertain'd upon the first discourse of sending the Prince into the West, than that he believed they would be willing to be engaged in the Service. However, it was easy to be foreseen, that upon any ill accidents, which were like enough to fall out, they who were still oblig'd to that duty, would not have reputation enough to exact that general submission, and obedience, which ought to be paid to the Commands of the Prince; of which there was shortly after too manifest evidence.

THERE was an Act of Divine Justice about this time exetham and cuted by those at Westminster, which ought not to be forgotten his Son tryed in the relation of the Affairs of this year; and which ought to at a Court of have caused very useful reflections to be made by many who War : Both were equally engag'd; fome of whom afterwards did underare condemn'd, and goe the same fate. There hath been often mention before of Sr John Hotham, who shut the Gates of Hull against the King, and refused to give him entrance into that Town, when he came thither attended only by his own Servants, before the beginning of the War; and was, in truth, the immediate cause of the War. It was the more wonderful, that a Person of a full and ample Fortune, who was not diffurbed by any Fancies in Religion, had unquestion'd duty to the Crown, and reverence for the Government both of Church and State, should so foolishly expose Himself, and his Family, of great Antiquity, to comply with the humours of those Men whose Persons he did not much esteem, and whose deligns he perfectly detested. But, as his particular Animosity against the Earl of Strafford, first engaged him in that Company, so his Vanity and Ambition, and the Concessions the King had made to their unreasonable demands, made him concur farther with them, than his own judgement disposed him to. He had taken upon him the Government of Hull, without any apprehension, or imagination, that it would ever make him accessary to Rebellion; but believ'd, that, when the King and Parliament should be reconciled, the eminence of that Charge would promote him to some of those rewards and honours, which that Party resolv'd to divide among themselves. When he found himlelf more dangerously and desperately Embarked than he ever intended to be, he bethought himself of all possible ways to disintangle himself, and to wind himself out of the Labyrinth he was in. His Comportment towards the Lord Digby, and Albburnham, and his Inclinations at that time, have been mention'd before at large; and from that time, the entire conlidence the Parliament had in his Son, and the vigilance and jealouly that he was known to have towards his Father, was that alone that preferv'd him longer in the Government. Beides that they had so constituted the Garrison, that they knew it could never be in the Father's power to do him hurt. But, after this, when they discover'd some alteration in the Son's behaviour, and that the Pride and Stubbornels of his Nature would not fuffer him to submit to the Command of the Lord Fairfax, and that superiority over both his Father and Him, with which the Parliament had invested that Lord, and had some inkling of secret Messages between the Marquis of New-Castle, and young Hotham, they caused both Father and Son to be suddainly seised upon, and sent up Prisoners to the Parliament; which immediately committed them to the Tower, upon a charge of High Treason.

Though there was Evidence enough against them, yet they had so many Friends in both Houses of Parliament, and some of that Interest in the Army, that they were preserv'd from farther prosecution, and remain'd long Prisoners in the Tower without being brought to any Trial; so that they believ'd their Punishment to be at the highest. But when that Party prevail'd that resolv'd to new Model the Army, and to make as many examples of their rigour and severity, as might terrify all Men from falling from them, they call'd importunately, that the two Hotham's might be tryed at a Court of War, for their Treachery and Treason; and they who had hitherto preserv'd them, had now lost their Interest; so that they were both brought to their Trial, some little time before the Treaty at Uxbridge, and both condemn'd to lose their Heads. The principal Charge against the Father was, his suffering the Lord Digby to escape; and a Letter was produced, by the Treachery of a Servant, against the Son, which he had sent to the Marquis of New-Castle. The vile artifices that were used both before and after their Trial, were so barbarous, and inhuman, as have been rarely practiced among Christians.

THE Father was first condemn'd to suffer upon a day appointed, and the Son afterwards to be executed in like manner the day following: The Night before, or the very Morning, that Sr John Hotham was to dye, a Reprieve was tent from the House of Peers to suspend his execution for three days. The Commons were highly incenfed at this prefumption in the Lords; and to prevent the like mischief for the future, they made an Order "to all Mayors, Sheriffs, Bayliffs, and "other Ministers of Justice, that no Reprieve should be grant-"ed, or allow'd for any Person against whom the sentence of "Death was pronounced, except the same had passed, and "had the consent of both Houses of Parliament; and that if "it passed only by the House of Peers, it should be looked "upon as invalid and void, and execution should not be there-"upon forborne, or fuspended. By this accident the Son was brought to his Execution before his Father, upon the day on which he was fentenced to fuffer; who dyed with Courage, and reproaching "the ingratitude of the Parliament, and "their continuance of the War; concluded, "that, as to them, "he was very innocent, and had never been guilty of Treason. The Father was brought to the Scaffold the next day: For the House of Commons, to shew their Prerogative over the Lords, fent an Order to the Lieutenant of the Tower, that he should cause him to be Executed that very day, which was two days before the Reprieve granted by the House of Peers was expired. Whether he had yet some promise from Peters, that he should only be shew'd to the People, and so return'd safe again to the Tower, which was then generally reported, and believ'd, or whether he was broken with despair (which is more probable) when he faw that his Enemies prevail'd fo far, that he could not be permitted to live those two days which the Peers had granted him, certain it is that the poor Man appear'd so dispirited, that he spoke but few words after he came upon the Scaffold, and fuffer'd his ungodly Confessor Peters, to tell the People "that he had reveal'd himself to "him, and confess'd his Offences against the Parliament; and to he committed his Head to the block. This was the woeful Tragedy of these two unhappy Gentlemen; in which there were so many circumstances of an unusual Nature, that the immediate II.

SINCE the last Office of a General, with reference to the King's Quarters, which the Earl of Effex perform'd before he found it necessary to surrender his Commission to the Parliament, was done before the end of this year, it will be proper in this place to mention it, both in respect of the Nature of the thing it felf, and the Circumstances with which it was conducted, it being a Letter fign'd by the Earl of Effex, and ent by a Trumpet to Prince Rupert, but penn'd by a Comnittee of Parliament, and perused by both Houses before it vas fign'd by their General; who us'd, in all dispatches made y Himfelf, to observe all decency in the forms. It was a ery insolent Letter, and upon avery insolent occasion. The Parliament had, some Months before, made an Ordinance gainst giving Quarter to any of the Irif Nation which should e taken Prisoners, either at Sea or Land; which was not aken notice of, or indeed known to the King, till long after; hough the Earl of Warwick, and the Officers under him at ea, had as often as he met with any Irish Frigats, or such redbooters as failed under their Commission, taken all the ea Men who became Prisoners to them of that Nation, and ound them back to back, and thrown them over board into he Sea, without distinction of their condition, if they were with in this cruel manner very many poor Men perished ally; of which, when it was generally known, the King said othing, because none of those Persons were in his Majesty's ervice; and how barbarous loever the proceedings were, his dajeity could not complain of it, without undergoing the reroach of being concern'd on the behalf, and in favour of the kebels of Ireland. But there had been lately, in some Service at Land, some Prisoners taken of the King's Troops, and upon pretence that hey were Irishmen, as many as they thought to be of that Nation, were all hanged, to the Number of ten or twelve. Whereupon, Prince Rupert, having about the time when he neard of that barbarity, taken an equal Number of the Parliament Soldiers, caused Them likewise to be hanged upon the next Tree: which the Parliament declared to be an Act of great injustice, and cruelty; and appointed the Earl of Essex to expostulate it with Prince Rupert very rudely, in the Letter they had caus'd to be penn'd for him, and to send a Copy of their Ordinance, enclosed in the said Letter, with expressions full of reproach, for his "presumption in making an Ordinance of Theirs, the Argument to justify an Action of so much inhumanity; which was the first knowledge the

For we have made lies our refuge, and under falshood have we hid our felves.

E are now entring upon a time, the repre-Introduction fentation and description whereof, must to the Ninth needs be the most unpleasant, and ungrate-Book and the ful to the Reader, in respect of the Subject matter of it; which will confift of no els weakness and folly, on the one side, than of malice and wickedness, on the other; and the most unagreeable and difficult to the Writer, in regard, that he shall, probably, please very sew who acted then upon the Stage of business, but must give very severe Characters of the Persons, and severely cenure the Actions of many, who wish'd very well, and had not the least thought of disloyalty or insidelity, as well as of those, who, with the most deliberate impiety, prosecuted their design to ruin and destroy the Crown: A time, in which the whole stock of Affection, Loyalty, and Courage, which at first alone engaged Men in the Quarrel, seem'd to be quite spent, and to be succeeded by negligence, laziness, inadvertency, and dejection of Spirit, contrary to the Natural temper, vivacity, and constancy of the Nation: A time, in which they who pretended most publick-heartedness, and did really wish the King all the greatness he desir'd to preserve for him. felf, did facrifice the publick Peace, and the fecurity of their Master to their own passions and appetites, to their ambition and animolities against each other, without the least delign of Treachery, or damage towards his Majesty: A time, in which want of discretion, and meer folly, produced as much mis chief, as the most barefaced Villany could have done; in which the King fuffer'd as much, by the irrefolution, and unstead ness of his own Counsels, and by the ill humour, and faction of his Counfellors, by their not forefeeing what was eviden to most other Men, and by their jealousies of what was no like to fall out; fometimes by deliberating too long without refolving, and as often refolving without any deliberation and most of all, not executing Vigorously what was delib rated and resolved, as by the indefatigable industry, and then reliftible power and strength of his Enemies.

ALL these things must be very particularly enlarged upon and exposed to the naked View, in the Relation of what fel out in this year, 1645, in which we are engaged, except w will swerve from that precise Rule of ingenuity, and integri ty, we profess to observe; and thereby leave the Reader mon perplexed, to see the most prodigious accidents fall out, with out differning the no less prodigious causes which product them; which would lead him into as wrong an estimate of things, and perswade him to believe, that an universal comp tion of the hearts of the whole Nation had brought for those lamentable effects; whereas they proceeded only from the folly and the frowardness, from the weakness and the wi fulnels, the pride and the passion of particular Persons, who Memories ought to be charg'd with their own evil Action rather than that the Infamy of them should be laid on the Ag wherein they liv'd; which did produce as many Men em ment for their loyalty and incorrupted fidelity to the Crown as any that had preceded it. Nor is it possible to discount of all these particulars, with the clearness that is necessary Subject them to Common understandings, without opening a door for fuch reflections upon the King himself, as sha feem to call both his Wisdom, and his Steadiness into quell on, as if he had wanted the one to apprehend and discover and the other to prevent, the Mischiess which threaten'd him All which confiderations might very well discourage, and ever terrify me from profecuting this part of the Work, with fud a freedom and openness, as must call many things to memor which are forgotten, or were never fufficiently understood and rather perswade me to satisfy my self, with a bare relation of what was done, and with the known event of the miserable year (which, in truth, produced all that followed in the succeeding years) without prying too strictly into the causes of those effects, and so let them seem rather to be the production of Providence, and the instances of Divine displeasure, than shew how they proceed from the weakness and inadvertency of Men, not totally abandon'd by God Almighty to the most unruly lusts of their own appetite, and inventions.

BUT I am too far embarked in this Sea already, and have proceeded with too much simplicity and sincerity with reference to Things, and Persons, and in the examinations of the grounds, and overfights of Counfels, to be now frighted with the prospect of those Materials, which must be comprehended within the relation of this year's transactions. I know my felf to be very free from any of those Passions which naurally transport Men with prejudice towards the Persons whom they are obliged to mention, and whose Actions they re at liberty to censure. There is not a Man who acted the worst part, in this ensuing year, with whom I had ever the east difference, or Personal unkindness, or towards whom I ad not much inclination of kindness, or from whom I did ot receive all invitations of farther endearments. There vere many who were not free from very great faults, and verlights in the Counsels of this year, with whom I had reat Friendship, and which I did not discontinue upon those nhappy overlights; nor did flatter them when they were aft, by excusing what they had done. I knew most of the hings my felf which I mention, and therefore can Answer for he Truth of them; and other most important particulars, which were transacted in places very distant from me, were ansmitted to me, by the King's immediate direction and orer, even after he was in the hands and power of the Enemy, ut of his own Memorials, and Journals. And as he was alvays severe to himself, in censuring his own overlights, so e could not but well foresee, that many of the misfortunes f this enfuing year, would reflect upon some want of resoation in Himself, as well as upon the gross errors, and overghts, to call them no worle, of those who were trusted by im. Wherefore as I first undertook this difficult work with his approbation, and by His encouragement, and for His indication, so I enter upon this part of it, principally, that he world may see (at least if there be ever a fit season for ach a Communication; which is not like to be in this preent Age) how difficult it was for a Prince, so unworthily educed to those streights his Majesty was in, to find Miniers, and Instruments, equal to the great Work that was to e done; and how unlikely it was for him to have better fucess under their conduct whom it was then very proper for Vol. L. him to trust with it; and then, without my being over sollicitous to absolve him from those mistakes, and weaknesses, to which he was in truth sometimes liable, he will be sound not only a Prince of admirable Virtue, and Piety, but of great parts of Knowledge and Judgement; and that the most signal of his Missfortunes proceeded chiefly from the modesty of his Nature, which kept him from trusting himself enough, and made him believe, that others discern'd better, who were much inferior to him in those faculties; and so to depan often from his own reason, to sollow the opinions of more unskilful Men, whose affections he believ'd to be unquestionable to his Service. And so we proceed in our relation of matter of Fact.

WHAT expectation soever there was, that the Self-denying Ordinance, after it had, upon so long deliberation, passed the House of Commons, would have been rejected and cast ou by the Peers; whereby the Earl of Effex would still have to main'd General; it did not take up to long Debate there The Marquis of Argyle was now come from Scotland, and fan with the Commissioners of that Kingdom, over whom he had a great afcendent. He was, in matters of Religion, and in relation to the Church, purely Presbyterian; but in matter of State, and with reference to the War, perfectly Independent. He abhorr'd all thoughts of Peace, and that the King should ever more have the Government, towards whose Per fon, notwithstanding the infinite obligations he had to him he had always an inveterate malice. He had made a fill Friendship with Sr Harry Vane, during his late being in Son land; and they both liked each others Principles in Govern ment. From the time of His coming to the Town, the Scotish Commissioners were less vehement in obstructing the Ordinance, or the new modelling the Army: fo that after it came to the House of Peers, though thereby the Earl of Essex the Earl of Manchester, the Earl of Warwick, and the Earld Denbigh (whose power and authority, that is, the power credit, and authority, of the three first named, had absolutely govern'd and fway'd that House from the beginning) were m be dispossessed of their Commands, and no Peer of England capable of any employment either Martial, or Civil; yet the Ordinance found little Opposition, and the old Argument "that the House of Commons thought it necessary, and the "it would be of mischievous Consequence to diffent from the "House of Commons, so far prevailed, that it passed the formality in which he had been invested with it. Fairfax was now nam'd, and declar'd General, though the Earl of Effex made not haft to furrender his Commission; so that some Men imagin'd, that he would yet have contested it: but he was not for such enterprises, and did really believe that the Parliament would again have need of him, and his delay was only to be well advised, in all the circumstances of the formality. In the end it was agreed, that, at a conference of both Houses in the Painted-Chamber, he should deliver his Commission; which he did. And because he had no very plaufible faculty in expressing himself, he chose to do it in Writing; which he deliver'd to them; wherein he declar'd, "with "what Affection and Fidelity he had ferv'd them, and as he "had often ventur'd his Life for them, so he would willingly "have loft it in their Service; and fince they believ'd, that "what they had more to do would be better perform'd by "another Man, he submitted to their judgement, and restored "their Committion to them; hoping they would find an abler "Servant: concluding with fome expressions which made it manifest that he did not think he had been well used, or that they would be the better for the change : and so left them, and return'd to his own House; whither both Houses, the The Ear! of next day, went to attend him, and to return their thanks for Effexrefigns the great Service he had done the Kingdom; which they ac-his Commisknowledged with all the Encomiums, and Flattering Attributes fion:

The request feeming so reasonable, and being for so short a time, little opposition was made to it: and shortly after, by another Letter, he defir'd with very much earnestness, "that they would allow Crompell to serve for that Camcc pagne. Thus they compassed their whole design, in being rid of all those whose affections they knew were not agreeable to Theirs, and keeping Cromwell in Command; who, in the Name of Fairfax, Modell'd the Army, and placed such Officers as were well known to Him, and to no body elfe; and absolutely govern'd the whole Martial Affairs; as was Models the quickly known to all Men; many particulars whereof will be

THOUGH the time spent in passing the Self-denying Ordinance, and afterwards in new modelling their Army, had exceedingly retarded the preparations the Enemy was to make, before they could take the Field, whereby the King had more breathing time than he had reason to expect; yet all the hope he had of Recruits against that Season, depended upon the Activity of those to whose Care the providing those Recruits was committed: fo that there will be little Occasion to mention any thing that was done at Oxford, till the Season of the year oblig'd his Majesty to leave that place, and to march with his Army into the Field. Of all the Action that was till that time, the West was the Scene; where the Prince, assoon as he came to Bristal, found much more to do (and in which he could not avoid to meddle) than had been foreseen. very great end of the Prince's Journey into the West, besides the other of more importance, which has been named before, was, that by His prefence, direction, and authority, the many Factions and Animolities between particular Persons of Quality, and Interest in those Parts, equal in their affections to the King's Service (yet they miserably infested and distracted it) might be composed, and reconcil'd; and that the endervours of all Men who wish'd well, might be united in the advancing and carrying on that publick Service, in which all their joynt happiness and security was concern'd. This Province, besides the Prince's immediate countenance, and interposition, required great diligence and dexterity in those about him, who were trusted in those Affairs. But his Highness found quickly another task incumbent on him than had been expected, and a Mischief much more difficult to be masterd, and which, if unmaster'd, must inevitably produce much worle effects, than the other could, which was, the ambition, emulation, and contest, between several Officers of the Army, and Parties,

THE Lord Goring had been fent by his Majesty, before the time of the Prince's coming into the West, with such a Party of Horse, Foot, and Dragoons, and a Train of Artillery, as he defir'd, into Hamphire, upon a defign of his own, of making an Incursion into Suffex; where he pretended "he had cor-"respondence; and that very many well affected Persons pro-"mised to rise, and declare for the King, and that Kent would "do the same. And so a Commission was granted to him, of Lieutenant General of Hampsbire, Suffex, Surrey, and Kent, without the least purpose or imagination that he should even be near the Prince. Some attempts he made, in the beginning, upon Christ-Church, in Hampshire, a little unfortified Fisher-Town; yet was beaten off with loss; So that he was forced to retire to Salisbury; where his Horse committed the same horrid outrages, and barbarities, as they had done in Hamphire, without distinction of Friends or Foes; to that those Parts, which before were well devoted to the King, worried by Oppression, wish'd for the access of any Forces to redeem. Whilst the Lord Goring lay fruitlessly in those Parts, a them. Party of Horse and Dragoons, under the Command of Vandruske a German, passed by him without interruption, to the relief of Taunton, then block'd up by Colonel Windham, and reduced to some streights; and accordingly effected it. About the same time, Sr Walter Hastings, Governour of Portland, seconded by Sr Lewis Dives (who had the Command of Dorfet-shire as Colonel General) had furprifed Weymouth, and polclied the Forts, and the upper Town, the Rebels having withdrawn themselves into the lower Town, divided from the other by an Arm of the Sea, and of no confiderable trength: fo that the speedy reducing that small place was not look'd upon as a matter of difficulty. However, left those Forces which had reliev'd Taunton, and were conceiv'd to be much greater than in truth they were, should be able to disturb the work of Weymouth, and for the sooner expediting the business there, the Lord Goring, now pretending that his Friends in Suffex and Kent were not ready for him, was by Order from Oxford, upon his own defire, fent thither; whereby r was thought, both the work of Weymouth, and Taunton, would be speedily effected. Thereupon the Lord Hopton, whose right it was to Command in those Counties as Field-Marshal of the West, being sent down by the King to compose the disorders there, upon the relief of Taunton, was, by special Order, recall'd to Bristol, lest there might be dispute of Command between Him and the Lord Goring; the one being General of the Ordinance, the other General of the Horse; but the Lord Hopton was likewise Field-Marshal of the West, in which the Lord Goring had no Commission to Command.

SHORTLY after the Lord Goring's arrival about Weymouth, with his full strength of Horse, Foot, and Dragoons, and Artillery, confifting of above three thousand Horse, and fifteen hundred Foot, belides what he found in those parts, that place of fo vast Importance, was, by most Supine Negligence at belt, retaken by that contemptible Number of the Enemy, who had been beaten into the lower Town, and who were look'd upon as Prisoners at Mercy. The mysteries of which fatal loss were never enquir'd into; but with great plainness, by the Vote of the Country, imputed to General Goring's natural want of Vigilance; who thereupon retir'd with his whole strength into Somerset-shire. His Highness, upon his arrival at Bristol, found the West in this Condition; All Dorset-shire entirely possessed by the Rebels, save only what Sr Lewis Dives could protect by his small Garrison at Sherborne, and the Island of Portland, which could not provide for its own Subfiftence: the Garrison of Taunton, with that Party of Horse and Dragoons which reliev'd it, commanding a very large circuit, and diffurbing other parts in Somerset-shire: Devon-shire intent upon the blocking up of Plymouth, at one end, and open to incursions from Lyme, and prejudiced by Taunton, at the other end: The King's Garrisons, in all three Counties, being stronger in Fortifications (which yet were not finish'd in any place, and but begun in some) than in Men, or any Provisions to endure an Enemy: whilft the Lord Goring's Forces equally infested the borders of Dorfet, Somerfet, and Deven, by unheard of Rapine, without applying themselves to any Enterprize upon the Rebels. Cornwal indeed was entire; but being wholely affign'd to the blocking up of Plymouth, yielded no supply to any other Service, or to the providing its own Garrisons against the time that they might be visited by an Enemy.

SIR William Waller and Cromwell, march'd together about this time towards the West, and passing through Wilt-shire, had routed, and taken the whole Regiment of Horse of Colonel Long, the High Sheriff of that County, by his great defect of Courage, and Conduct; and seem'd to intend an attempt upon General Goring; who was so much startled with the noise, at a great distance, that he drew his Forces so far West of Taunton, that Vandruske had an opportunity to retire with

with that Body of Horse and Dragoons with which he had reliev'd Taunton, to his fellows; whilst the King's Forces reposed themselves upon the borders of Devon-shire, the Lord Goring himself, and most of his principal Officers, taking that opportunity to refresh at Exeter, where they stay'd three or sour days in most scandalous disorder, a great part of his Horse lying upon free Quarter, and plundering to the Gates of the City; which, in the beginning of the year, was an ill Presage to that People, what they were to expect. But finding that So William Waller made not that hast he apprehended, having borrow'd such Horse and Foot as he could procure from Exeter, he return'd again towards Taunton, and gave his Highness an account of his Condition.

THE Prince, being attended at Briftol by the Commiffioners of Somerfet, found no one thing provided, or one promile complied with, which had been made by them at Oxford: Of his Guards of Horse and Foot, which they assured him, for the proportion of that County, should be ready against his coming, not one Man or Horse provided: Of the hundred pound a Week, to be allowed by them towards his Highness's support, not one penny ready, nor like to be. So that he was forced to borrow from the Lord Hopton's own private ftore, to buy Bread. And, which was worse than all this, we found plainly, that, what had been so particularly, and positively undertaken at Oxford, was upon the confidence only of three or four Men, who were govern'd by Sr John Stawel, and Mr Fountain, without any concurrence from the rest of the Commissioners of that, or the other three Associated Counties; and that they who had been so confident, instead of forming and pursuing any delign for raising of Men or Money, were only bufy in making Objections, and preparing Complaints, and pursuing their private Quarrels, and Animolities against others. So they brought, every day, Complaints against this and that Governour of Garrisons, for the Riots and Insolences of the Lord Goring's Soldiers, and, "that those "parts of the Country which were adjacent to Sherborne, and "Bridgewater, were compell'd to work at those Fortifica-"tions; with other particulars, most of which, they well knew, in that conjuncture of time, could not be prevented; and fome of which were in themselves very necessary. Yet the Prince endeavour'd to give them all encouragement; told them, "that he was very fensible of all those disorders, of "which they complain'd; and would redress them, assoon as they should discern it to be in his Power: that the Forces "under the Lord Goring were an Army by themselves, come "down into those Parts, before his Highness; and stay'd then "there for their Protection against the power of Waller (which 514

"was ready to Invade them) and the Garrison of Taunton, which they confessed infested their whole Country; that he was very desirous that Army might move Eastward, associated as they should put themselves in such a posture, as might render them secure against their Enemies; wish'd them to propose any Expedients, how the Fortifications of the Gar. risons might be sinish'd, without some extraordinary help; or to propose the most convenient one; and he would joyn with them; and desir'd them to proceed in their Levies of Men, and Money, in the ways agreed on by themselves; and they should find all concurrence and assistance from him. But notwithstanding all he could say or do, nothing was reasonably proposed, or admitted by them, for the advancement of the Publick Service.

By this time, towards the end of March, St William Waller having advanced with his Horse and Dragoons, by Bath towards Briftol, in hope, as hath been faid before, to have furprised that City by some Treachery within, and being disappointed there, retired towards Dorset-shire, and the edge of Somerfet, adjoyning to that County; where Cromwell expeded him; the Lord Goring having, in the mean while, fallen into some of Cromwell's Quarters about Dorchester, and taken fome Prisoners, and Horses, and disorder'd the rest. Upon adispute between themselves, or some other Orders, Cromwell retird to joyn with Sr Thomas Fairfax towards Reading; Sr William Waller stay'd in those Parts, to intend the business of the Well, but made no hast to advance, expecting some Supplies of Four by Sea at Weymouth. So that the Lord Goring drew back to Bruton, and fent to the Prince to defire, "that two of his "Council might meet him at Wells the next day, to confider, "what course was best to be taken: accordingly the Lords Capel and Colepepper, the next day, met his Lordship at Wells. Where, after long confideration of the whole State of the West, and of the great importance of reducing Taunton, without which no great matter could be expected from Somerfetshire, the Lord Goring proposed, and put the design in writing under his own hand, for the whole method and manner of his proceeding, "that he would leave the gross of his Horse, "and two hundred Foot mounted, in such convenient place, "upon the skirts of Dorset-Shire, and Wilt-Shire, as they might " be able to retire to their Body, if the Enemy advanced power-"fully, and that he would himself, with all his Foot, and "Cannon, and fuch Horse as were necessary, attempt the "taking, or burning of Taunton: and to that purpose, desir'd his Highness, "to send positive Orders to Sr Richard Greenvil (who, notwithstanding his Highness's commands formerly sent to him, and some Orders from the King himself, made not that half as might night reasonably be expected) to advance, and to direct the Commissioners of Somerset to give their Personal attendance upon that Service; and in the mean time to take care that sufficient Magazines of Victual, and Provisions, were made for the Soldiers: all which was exactly persorm'd by his Highness, the next day after he receiv'd the desires of Gene-

Bur, within three or four days, and before the defign upon Taunton was ready for Execution, it appear'd by constant Inelligence, that Waller was advancing with a great Body of Horse, and Dragoons, and some Foot; and therefore the atempt upon Taunton was for the present to be laid aside; and he Lord Goring very earnestly desir'd the Prince to Comhand Sr Richard Greenvil, who was now drawn near to Taunon, with eight hundred Horse, and above two thousand Foot, elides Pioneers, with all poslible speed to march to him, that he might be able to abide the Enemy, if they came upon im; or, otherwise, to compel them to Fight, if they stay'd a those fast Quarters, where they then were; which was aout Shaftsbury, Gillingham, and those places. The Prince acordingly fent his Commands positively to Sr Richard Greenvil, to advance towards the Lord Goring, and to obey all such Orders, as he should receive from his Lordship. But he as olitively fent his Highness word, "that his Men would not ftir a foot; and that he had promifed the Commissioners of Devon, and Cornwal, that he would not advance beyond Taunton, till Taunton were reduced; but that he made no question, if he were not disturbed, speedily to give a good account of that place. In the mean time, the Lord Goring, ery gallantly and successfully, by night, fell upon Sr William Valler's Quarters twice, in less than a Week; and kill'd and pok so good a Number, that it was generally believ'd, Se Villiam Waller was lessen'd near a thousand Men by those Renounters; the Lord Goring still declaring, "that he could neither pursue his advantages upon a Party, nor engage the main of the Rebels, without the addition of Greenvil's Foot; nd he, notwithstanding all Orders, as peremptorily refusing of stir, but professing, "that, if he had an addition of six hundred Men, he would be in the Town within fix days.

Whilst things stood thus, Sr William Waller, much veaken'd with these disasters, and the time of his Command eing near expir'd, drew back Eastward; and was, by night narches, retired as far as Salisbury, before the Lord Goring ad notice of his Motion. Whereupon his Highness, upon onsideration how impossible it was to overtake him, which beneral Goring himself consessed by his Letters, or to engage he Forces under the Command of Greenvil, and the other

Forces of those parts, in any Action, before the business of Taunton should be over (which indeed disappointed all our hopes both of Men, and Money, in that great County) and on the other fide, confidering, if that place were reduced (3) Sr Richard Greenvil undertook it should be in fix days, and others, who had view'd it, thought it not a work of time besides the terror it would strike into their Neighbours, there would be an Army of four thousand Horse, and five thoufand Foot, ready to be applied to any service they should be directed to, and that then the Lord Goring might profecute his Commission in Suffex, and Kent, with such a reasonable Recruit of Foot as should be necessary, and yet his Highness enabled, in a short time, to be in the head of a very good Army, raised out of the four Affociated Counties, either for the reducing the few other places which were Garrison'd by the Rebels, or to march toward his Majesty: I fay, upon these considerations, the Prince (with the privity and advice of Prince Rupert, who was then at Briftol, and present at the whole confultation, and the principal adviser in it) writ, upon the eleventh of April, to the Lord Goring, being then about Wells, "that his opinion was, that the Horse and Dragoom "under his Lordship's Command, should advance from the "Quarters where they then were, much to the prejudice of "that County, into Dorset-shire, or Wilt-shire, or into both of them; and that the Foot and Cannon should march de rectly towards Taunton, according to the defign formerly "proposed by his Lordship; and referr'd it to himself, who "ther his Lordship in Person would stay with the Horse, or "go with the Foot; and defir'd to receive his opinion, and "resolution upon the whole; there being nothing proposed "to be acted in two days. This Letter was fent by Colond Windham, the Governour of Bridgewater, who came that day, from before Taunton, from Sr Richard Greenvil; and could best inform him of the strength of the Town, and the condtion of St Richard Greenvil's Forces.

The next day Colonel Windham return'd, with a short fullen Letter from the Lord Goring to the Prince, "that he had, according to his Command, sent the Foot and Cannon to Taunton; and the Horse, to the other places; and that, "fince there was now nothing for him to do, he was gone to "Bath to intend his Health: where he complain'd privately, "that his Forces were taken from him at a time when he meant to pursue Waller, and could utterly Defeat him; and much inveigh'd against the Prince's Council, for sending Orders to him so prejudicial to the King's Service: whereas it was only an Opinion, and not Orders, grounded upon what himself had formerly proposed, and to which he was desired return his present judgement, being within half a days urney of the Prince, upon whom he ought to have attended Person, or have sent his advice to him, if what was then ser'd seem'd not convenient. But, after some days frolickly ent at Bath, he return'd to his former temper, and waiting the Prince at Bristol, was contented to be told, "that he had been more apprehensive of Discourteses than he had cause; and so all misunderstandings seem'd to be fairly

THE Lord Goring's Foot and Cannon being thus fuddainly nt to Taunton, under the Command of Sr Toleph Wagstaffe; r the better preventing any Mistakes, and Contests about ommand, the Prince Sent the Lords Capel and Colepepper to funton, to fettle all disputes that might arise, and to dispose e Country to affift that work in the best manner; which ov'd very fortunate; for the same day they came thither, Richard Greenvil, having brought his Forces within Muset-shot, on one side of Taunton, went himself to view ellington-House, five Miles distant, in which the Rebels had Garrison, and was, out of a Window, shot in the Thigh; ith which he fell, the wound being then conceived to be lortal: fo that there was no Person who would pretend to ommand; those under Greenvil, having no experienced flicer of Reputation equal to that Charge, yet being Superior number to the other, would not be Commanded by S. 70. bh Wagstaffe; so that if the Lords had not very happily en present, it is probable, both those Bodies of Foot, each ting too weak for the attempt by it felf, would, if not difinded, at best have retired to their former Posts, and left ofe of Taunton at liberty to have done what they thought But they being there, and Sr John Berkley being in that istant come thither to meet them, with an Account of the tate of Deven-shire, they perswaded him to undertake the refent Charge of the whole (all the Officers of both Bodies aving formerly receiv'd Orders from him) and to profecute he former design upon the Town; all Persons submitting till he Prince's Pleasure should be farther known; those Officers nder Sr Richard Greenvil, presently sending away an Express o Bristol, to desire the Lord Hopton to take the Command of hem. But his Lordship had no mind to enter upon any paricular Action with disjoynted Forces, till, upon the withrawing of the Lord Goring, the whole Command might be executed according to former establishment. And so a special lirection was fent to all the Officers, and Soldiers, to obey by the Lords. He, in few days, put the business in very good Order, and by Storm took Wellington-House, where Greenvil

Greenvil had been hurt. I cannot omit here, that the Lord, coming to visit Greenvil, in the instant that he was put in his Litter, and carrying to Exeter, told him, what they had thought necessary to be done in the point of Command; the which he seeming very well to approve, they desir'd him to call his Officers (most of the principal being there present and to Command them to proceed in the work in hand cheat fully, under the Command of Sr John Berkley; the which he promised to do, and immediately said somewhat to his Officers, at the side of his Litter, which the Lords conceiv'd to be what he had promised: but it appear'd after, that it was not so; and, very probably, was the contrary; for neither Officer, nor Soldier, did his duty after he was gone, during the time Sr John Berkley Commanded in that Action.

THE Prince, finding the Publick Service in no degree at vanced by the Commissioners of Somerset, and that thous there was no progress made in the Association affected, an undertaken by them, yet it ferv'd to cross, and oppose all other attempts whatfoever; those who had no mind to do any thing fatisfying themselves with the visible impossibility of that do fign, and yet the other, who had first proposed it, thinking themselves engaged to consent to no alteration; and his High ness being inform'd by a Gentleman (sent by him, at his sid coming to Briftol, to the two farthest Western Counties, it press the execution of whatsoever was promised in order to the Affociation) "that those two Counties of Devon, and con "mal, were entirely devoted to ferve the Prince, in what amanner foever he should propose; he thought fit, to summor the Commissioners of all the Associated Counties, to attend upon him in some convenient place, where, upon full confe deration, fuch conclusions might be made, as might best at vance the work in hand, both for the reduction of Taunta and railing a marching Army; which Counsel had been soons given, and had in truth been fit to be put in practice upon li first coming to Briftol, when he discern'd the flatness, peren ptoriness, and unactivity of the Gentlemen of Somerset; from whom it was evident nothing was to be expected, till, by the unanimity and strength of the two Western Counties, the County could be driven and compelled to do what was neces fary, and to recede from their own fullen and positive determinations; which had been easy to do, but that shortly after his Highness came to Bristel, upon what apprehensions no Man knew, there was great jealousy at Oxford of his going farther West; and thereupon direction given " that he should "not remove from Briftol, but upon weighty reasons, and "with which his Majesty was to be first acquainted. Whereas by his instructions, "he was to make his residence in such « place place, as by the Council should be thought most conducing to his Affairs. However, fuch a meeting with all the Comflioners being demonstrably necessary, and Bristol thought too great a distance from the West, besides that the Plague The Prince gun to break out there very much, for the time of the year, summens the Highness resolv'd to go to Bridgewater for a few days, and Commissummon thither the Commissioners, the rather to give some some finers of the untenance to the business of Taunton, then closely Besieged ciated west-Sr John Berkley; and to that purpose, directed his Letters ern Counties the feveral Commissioners to attend him there, on Wednef-to Bridgey the three and twentieth of April; the King being then at water.

" would in a very short time (as I remember a Month w the utmost) "raise, and Arme, fix thousand Foot, belief "the Prince's Guards, which would be full two though "more; not reckoning those of the Lord Goring's which we " fifteen hundred, but including the Foot of Sr John Berth and Sr Richard Greenvil then before Taunton; which all M concluded, would be reduced in less than a Month. To Proposition being approv'd by the Prince, all particulars we agreed upon: the several days for the Rendezvous of the ne levies, and the Officers to whom the Men were to be de ver'd, named; and Warrants issued out accordingly; all thin requifite for the speedy reduction of Taunton order'd, and rected: fo that, towards the taking that place, and the rain an Army speedily, all things stood so fair, that more could be wished.

As this Journey to Bridgewater wrought this good effe fo it produced one notable inconvenience, and discover'd other. The Prince, having before his coming from Oxfo been very little conversant with business, had been persware from his coming out, to fit frequently, if not constantly, Council, to mark, and confider the state of Affairs, and to custom himself to a habit of speaking, and judging upon w was faid; to the which he had with great ingenuity apply himself; but coming to Bridgewater, and having an extra dinary kindness for Mrs Windham, who had been his Nu he was not only diverted by her folly, and petulancy, in applying himself to the serious consideration of his busine but accustom'd to hear her speak negligently and scornfully the Council; which though at first it made no impression Him of difrespect towards them, encouraged other Per who heard it, to the like liberty; and from thence grew irreverence towards them; which reflected upon himself, ferv'd to bring prejudice to their Counfels throughout whole course. She had many private deligns of benefits advantage to her felf, and her Children, and the qualify her Husband to do all Acts of power without controll w his Neighbours, and labour'd to procure Grants, or Prom of Revertions of Lands from the Prince; and finding that Prince was not to transact any such thing, without the Advi of the Council, and that They were not like to comply those enterprises, the contrived to raise jealousies and dille between them, and kindled such a faction in the Prince's mily, as produced many inconveniences. For from hence Charles Berkley, who had a promise to be made Control of the Prince's Household, and Mr Long, who had the promife to be his Secretary, when he should be created Prin of Wales (till which time those Officers were never made) an to think they had injury done them, that they were not refently of the Prince's Council, to which the places they were to have, gave them Title; though they knew well, that he Lords who then attended upon the Prince, were of the Ling's Privy Council, and in that capacity only, waited upon is Highness; and that the other were only of the Prince's wn Council for his Revenue, and for the administration of he Dutchy of Cornwal, for which his Highness had now his

However, these Fancies, thus weakly grounded, and ntertain'd, made fuch an impression upon those Persons, that hey united themselves into a Faction, and prevail'd over the reakness of the Earl of Berk-shire to joyn with them; and, y degrees, all of them joyn'd with all other discontented ersons, to render the Council to be much neglected and unervalued. Laftly, the being a Woman of no good breeding, nd of a Country pride; Nibil muliebre preter corpus gerens. alued her felf much upon the Power, and Familiarity, which er Neighbours might fee the had with the Prince of Wales; nd therefore, upon all occasions, in company, and when the concourse of the People was greatest, would use great boldess towards him; and, which was worse than all this, she fected in all Companies, where the let her felf out to any eedom, a very negligent and disdainful mention of the Pern of the King; the knowledge of which humour of hers, as one reason that made his Majesty unwilling his Son ould go farther West than Bristol; fince he knew Bridgeeter must be a Stage in that motion. This her ill disposition as no fooner known to the Lords, who were all absolute rangers to her before, than they took care that his Highness hould make no longer relidence in that Garrison.

THE other inconvenience, that it discoverd, was the degn of the Lord Goring to have the Command of the West. or then it grew very apparent, that, whatever had been preended for Kent, or Suffex, he had, from the beginning, afected that Charge; and, I fear, had some other encouragehent for it, than was then avowed. And therefore, from his rst coming into those Parts, he had with great industry caeffed the Commissioners of Somerset, and Deven, and espeially those, whom he thought not well inclin'd to the Lord Hopton; whom, by all ill Arts, he endeavour'd to undervahe inveighing against "the too great Contribution, assign'd to the Garrison of Bristol; and that any should be allowed to the unnecessary Garrison (as he call'd it) at Lamport; which had been lately fettled by the Lord Hopton; and, as ppear'd afterwards, was of valt importance: those discourses eing most Popular to the Country, though most pernicious

To Bridgewater he came at the fame time from Bath, upon pretence of "vifiting Taunton, and feeing "whether the work were like to be foon done, that it might "be worth the intending it. But, in truth, to drive on his Project for Command with the Commissioners; who were invited by Sr Peter Ball to make it one of the Propositions to the Prince, "that the Lord Goring might be constituted his "Lieutenant-General; which he himself had so absolutely digested, that, if the matter it self had been out of question, he proposed privately to most of the Prince's Council, the Rules that should be observed between them in the Government of the Army, and the Administration of the Civil part. Some, of no extraordinary kindness to Goring, wished the agreement made, and Him settled in the Command, as the belt, if not the only Expedient, for advancement of the King's Service, and for the speedy forming an Army worthy of the Prince's own Person in the Head of it; apprehending, that the dividing his Forces from the New Levies, would leave a good body of Foot without an equal Power of Horfe, and without a Train, except a longer time were given for the making it, than the state of Affairs promised to permit. But when Garing discover'd by his discourse with several of the Council (with whom he communicated upon the Argument very freely, and expressed in plain English, "that except he might be "fatisfied in the particulars he proposed, he should have no Theart to proceed in the publick Service) that they would not confent to any Act that might reflect upon the Lord Hopton; and that some of them had such a prejudice to his Person, that they would make no conjunction with him, he resolv'd to compass his ends some other way; and so pressed it no farther in any publick address to the Prince at that time. It is not to be omitted, that he was then offer'd, and affur'd, "that, affoon as the business of Taunton should be over, he "Ihould have fuch a Recruit out of the New Levies, as would "make up his own Foot three thousand Men, besides Offi-"cers; with which he might well profecute his former defign; and, in the mean time, he had the absolute Command; the Lord Hopton not at all interposing, or meddling with the

It was now concluded by all Men who had well confider'd his carriage and behaviour from his first coming into the West, that, as he had form'd that design in his own thoughts from the first, of being about the Prince, and resolv'd never to march with the Army under Prince Rupers (whose nature was not agreeable to him) so that he had purposely and

For if Taunton had been reduced, as it must have been if that finall Party had not Reliev'd it even in the last Article, he could have had no pretence to have stay'd in those Parts, but must immediately have purfued his former delign upon Suffex, and those other Counties, for which he had never any reasonable foundation; or have continued his march to the King; which he had less mind to do. When he first left Oxford, and went into Hampshire, which was before the end of the Treaty at Uxbridge, he had, in his jovial Fits, where he was always very unreferv'd, declared, with great refentment, "that his Father was ill "treated by the Queen in France, and that he hoped shortly "to be in such a posture, that the King should find it rea-"fonable to use both his Father and Himself better. And yet the King had even then, upon his Suit, made his Father Captain of his Guard of Halberteers, and Created him Earl of Norwich, whereby himself had the Appellation of Lord, which he enough affected: and in his first debauches at Exeter, his brother Porter, who was Lieutenant General of his Horse, inform'd some Persons of Honour in considence, "that "Goring resolv'd to make himself, Lieutenant General to the "Prince, or else to be very discontented. This Advertisement was fent to some of the Council, upon his Highness's hilt coming to Bristol; and was the first hint that ever they receiv'd, that he had affected that Charge; and was not, with the rest of his behaviour, like to dispose them to wish that he might obtain his defire; but to do all that was in their power to prevent it.

that it was thought very adviseable for his Highness himself to go to Exeter, where both the Commissioners and Sr Richard Greenvil were; and there, upon the hearing of all that could be faid, to fettle the whole dispute. But, at the same time, and whilst that matter was in consideration; Letters came from his Majesty to his Highness and the Lords, expressly inhibiting his going farther Westward; upon what reasons I cannot imagine; and thereupon the Prince himself return'd to Buistol on Wednesday the thirtieth of April, having staid at Bridgewater only feven days; and fent the Lords Capel and Upon which Colepepper, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, to Exeter, the Prince with instructions "to examine all the Complaints, and alle-fends three "gations of the Commissioners, and to settle the business of soners of his "the Contribution; and upon view of the several Commission to Exe-"fions of Sr John Berkley, and Sr Richard Greenvil, fo to agree ter, and fo "the matter of Jurisdiction, that the publick Service might Briffol, " not be obstructed.

Assoon as the Lords appointed by his Highness to go to Exeter, came thither, they went the same hour to Visit Sr Richard Greenvil, who was still bedrid of his hurt. They intended it only as a Visit, and so would not reply, at that time, to many very tharp, and bitter complaints and invectives he made against Sr John Berkley (who was then at the Leaguer before Taunton) but told him, "that they would come to "him again the next day, and confider of all bufineffes. Accordingly they came, when, with great bitternels, he again complain'd of the Governour, and some disrespects from his Lieutenant Governour: but when he was pressed to particulars, he mention'd principally some high and disdainful Speeches, the most of which were denied by the other, and the withholding some Prisoners from him, which he had fent his Marshal for near Taunton. The truth of which, was this; whilst Sr Richard was before Taunton, he had fent for one Mr Syms, a Justice of Peace of the County, a rich and decrepit Man, who liv'd within three miles of that Town. He charg'd him with some inclinations to the Rebels, and of favouring their proceedings. The Gentleman stood upon his justification, and innocency, and defired to be put upon any Trial. However, Sr Richard told him, "he was a Traytor, "and should redeem himself at a thousand pound, or else he "would proceed in another way; and gave him three days to provide the Money. Before the time expired, Sr Richard washurt, and carried to Exeter; whither he no fooner came; but he dispatch'd his Marshal to setch Mr Syms to him; who appeal'd to Sr John Berkley (who had then the Command) and defired to be put upon any Trial; and (belides that he was of a very infirm body, and unfit for Travel) many Gen-Tt 2

tlemen of the best Quality gave him a very good Testimony, and undertook for his Appearance, whenever he should be call'd upon. Upon this, Sr John Berkley discharged the Mar-Inal, and writ a very civil Letter to Sr Richard Greenvil, of the whole matter; "and that he would fee the Gentleman "forth coming upon the least warning; but that it would be "an Act of great cruelty, to carry him a Prisoner, in that in-"disposition of health, from his House. Sr Richard look'd upon this as the robbing him of a thousand pounds, and writ fuch a letter to Sr John Berkley, so full of ill Language, and reproach, as I have never feen the like Form, and to a Gentleman; and complain'd to us of the Injury. We told him, "that neither He, nor Sr John Berkley, had any Authority to " meddle with Mr Syms, or any Persons of that Quality; who "could not be look'd upon as Prisoners of War; but if in "truth he should prove to be a Delinquent, and guilty of "those crimes objected against him, his Fyne and Composi-"tion was due to the King, who had affign'd the same to the "Prince for the publick Service; and that there were Com-"missioners, before whom he was regularly to be tried, and "with whom he might only compound. He would not understand the reason of this, but insisted upon "Sr John Berk-" ley's protecting Syms, as a great indignity to himfelf. On the other hand, Sr John Berkley complain'd by his Letters, "that those Soldiers brought to Taunton by Greenvil, every "day moulder'd away, and he had reason to believe it was w by His direction; for that those that staid, and the Officers, were very backward in performing their duties; and that, "after the taking of Wellington-House, he had commanded ct that nothing should be done towards the defacing it, be-"cause it might possibly be fit to put a Garrison into it, if the "Siege should be raised from Taunton; but that the Officer,

"County; and many other particulars.

Sr Richard Greenvil denied, "that the Soldiers left the "Leaguer, or that Wellington-House was burn'd, by any dire"ction of His: though it appear'd, that all such Soldiers as left their Colours and came to him, were kindly used, and had Money given to them by him; and that Lieutenant Colonel Robinson, after he had receiv'd Orders from Sr John Berkley not to slight Wellington-House, rode to Exeter to Sr Richard Greenvil, and immediately, upon his return from him, caused it to be burnt. Greenvil said, "that he levyed no Monies, "nor issued out any Warrants, but what he had Authority to "do by his Commission. In the end they shewed him their Instructions from the Prince, "throughly to examine all dif-"ferences between them; and, upon view of both their Com-"missions, to agree what limits each of them should observe. Thereupon, he shew'd them his Commission in Paper, under his Majesty's Sign Manual, attested by the Lord Digby, by which he was authorized "to Command the Forces before "Plymouth; and in order thereunto, with fuch clauses of latitude and power, as he might both raise the posse, and Command the Train'd-bands, and indeed the whole Forces of both Counties; and was to receive Orders from his Majesty, and his Lieutenant General; and was likewise at that time High Sheriff of Devon. Sr John Berkley's Commission was precedent, and more formal, being under the Great Seal of England, " of Colonel General of the Counties of Devon and Cornwal, "and to Command the whole Forces of both Counties, as "well Train'd-bands, as others; so that, though their Commissions were not in intention all one, yet they included clauses, and powers, fo much the fame, that either of them had Authority enough to disturb the other; and he that only faw his own, might reasonably think he had power over the other: which, between Persons so disinclined one to the other as they were grown to be, might have prov'd very fatal, if the remedy had not been fo near by his Highness's Authority.

AFTER the perusal of their Commissions, they shew'd him their Instructions, concerning the regulating the Contributions, in proportionable affignments for the feveral Services; and defired his opinion, "what Forces were now necessary "for the blocking up of Plymouth, fince any attempt for the "taking it was to be laid aside, at least for a time? And that "thereupon, fuch affignation might be made to that purpole, "as was sufficient, and the rest otherwise disposed of. He told them, "that the Forces then there (being about fifteen hun-"dred Foot and four hundred Horse, of the Devon-shire side) "were fufficient; and proposed allowance little enough for the Service; and then faid, "that it troubled him to be con-"fined to fuch an employment, as the blocking up a place, "whilst there was like to be so much Action in the Field; and "therefore he hoped, his Highness would give him leave to "wait on him in the Army; where he thought he might do him much better Service. They told him, "they had Au-"thority from the Prince (for some of his Friends had mention'd the same, soon after he had receiv'd his wound) " if "they found his health able to bear it, and his inclination led "him that way, to let him know, that his Highness would "be glad of his Service, in the moulding that Army which "was then raising; which, allowing two thousand Foot to "the recruiting the Lord Goring, would be in view fix thou-" fand

"fand Foot, and above two thousand Horse with the Guards: "in which he had design'd Him the Second Place of Com"mand. But then, they said, "they knew not where to place
"the Command before Plymouth. Sr Richard very chearfully receiv'd the Proposition for himself in the Army; and for Plymouth, he said, "no Man was sit to undertake the work
"There, but Sr John Berkley, who had the Command of both
"Counties: that it was visible by the differences and breaches
"that had been between Them, how inconvenient it would be to have that Charge independent; whereas, if it were in one hand, the unanimous consent of both Counties, and all the Forces in them, would more easily do the business.

ALL things being thus agreed upon, as far as they could be without Sr John Berkley's confent, who was then before Taunton; the Lords refolv'd to return to the Prince, and in their way to dispose Sr John Berkley to what had been proposed; and left the Chancellor of the Exchequer at Exeter, to agree with the Commissioners, upon the settlement of the Contributions, and to fettle some other particulars which they had refolv'd upon. The whole Contribution of the County of Devon amounted to two thousand pound Weekly; whereof fo many hundreds were affign'd by the Commissioners, for the maintenance of the Forces before Plymouth, as amounted to the just proportion and establishment proposed by Sr Richard Greenvil himself; and then so many to the Garrisons of Exeter, Dartmonth, Barnstable, and Tiverton, as amounted to the payment of fuch Forces, as, on all hands, were agreed to be absolutely necessary for their defence, at the lowest establishment. All which being done, upon supposition that the whole Contribution, being two thousand pound Weekly, would be, according to the affignments, exactly paid, there remain'd not a penny overplus, for the buying Ammunition and Armes, for the finishing Fortifications, for Victualling the Garrisons, or for blocking up of Lyme; which if it were not done, all that part of the Country would be liable to that prelfure; and fo, unable to pay Contribution where it was affign'd. But it was supposed, the last might be done by drawing out fome Numbers from the feveral Garrisons, if there were no disturbance from abroad; and the rest must be supplied out of the Excise (the Major part whereof was by the King affign'd for the Support of the Princess Henrietta left at Exeter) and some other extraordinary ways to be thought of; the Letter Money, and Subscription Money, being almost exhausted.

His Highness was no sooner return'd to Bristol from Bridgewater, which was on the last day of April, than General Goring was sent for by the King, to draw his Horse and Dragoons towards Oxford; that thereby his Majesty might free free himself from Cromwell; who, with a very strong Party of Horse and Dragoons, lay in wait, to interrupt his joyning with Prince Rupert about Worcester. How unwelcome soever these Orders were to the Lord Gozing, yet there was no remedy but he must obey them: and it was now hoped, that the West should be hereafter freed from him, where he was at that time very ungracious. He march'd with that Expedition towards the King, who was then at Woodfock, that he fell upon a Horse Quarter of Cromwell's, and another Party of Fairfax's Horse, as they were attempting a passage over the River of Isis, so prosperously (the very Evening before he came to the King) that he broke and defeated them with a great flaughter, which gave him great Reputation, and made him exceedingly welcome: and it was indeed a very feafonable Action, to discountenance, and break such a Party, in the Infancy of their new model; and did break their prefent measures, and made Fairfax to appoint a new place of Rendezvous for his new Army, at a greater distance from the King's Forces.

PRINCE Rupert, who now met with very little opposition Resolutions in Council, had, throughout the Winter, disposed the King to taken at relolve "to march Northwards, and to fall upon the Scotift Oxford. "Army in York-shire, before Fairfax should be able to per-" fect his new model to that degree, as to take the Field. This defign was not unreasonable; nor the Prince to blame for defiring to take revenge on them for what passed the last year: which, now they were separated from the English, who had indeed defeated him, he believ'd was eafy to be done. That purpose of marching Northward was now the more hasten'd, that, in the way, Chefter might be reliev'd; which was closely belieg'd; and then they might come foon enough to Pontefract-Castle, before which the Scotish Army then was; and if they could defeat that, the King would be again, upon the mat-ter, Master of the North: which, by the insolence of the Scots, and the diflike they had of the new model, was conceiv'd to be better affected than ever. The next day after Goring came to the King, the Army was drawn to a Rendezyous, and confifted then of five thousand Foot, and above six thousand Horse; an Army not to be reasonably lessened in the beginning of a Campagne, when the King was to expect he should have so much to do; and if it had been kept together, it is very probable, that the Summer might have been

FAIRFAX was then about Newbury, not in readiness to march; yet reported to be much more unready than he was. It was faid, that his design was to carry his whole Army to the relief of Taunton, brought almost to extremity; which

if he could bring to pass, would give him great Reputation, and would make the Parliament near Sharers with the King in the interest of the West. Upon this prospect, it was thought reafonable, and accordingly proposed, "that the King himself would march with his Army into the West; and thereby, anot only prevent the relief of Taunton, but compel Fairfax to Fight, before he should be able to joyn with Cromwell; who had not gathered his Troops together. This was the concurrent advice of the whole Council with which the King used to consult, Prince Rupert only excepted, and Sr Marmaduke Langdale, who Commanded the Northern Horse; which were impatient to be in their own Country. Now the very contrary Affections towards each other, between Prince Rupert and the Lord Goring, began to cooperate to one and the fame end. The Prince found that Goring, as a Man of a ready Wit, and an excellent Speaker, was like to have most Credit with the King in all debates; and was jealous, that, by his Friendship with the Lord Digby, he would quickly get such an interest with his Majesty, that his own Credit would be much Eclipsed. Hereupon, he did no less desire that Goring should return again into the West, than Goring did, not to remain where Prince Rupert Commanded. This produced a great Confidence and Friendship between them, and the Prince told him all that any of the Council had spoken freely to him, when his Highness abhorr'd nothing more than that Goring should be near the Prince of Wales; and Goring said all of the Council, which he believ'd would most irreconcile him to them. So they both agreed to do all they could, to lessen the Credit and Authority of the Council. The King was desir'd to receive the Information, and State of the West, from Goring; who, upon the late good Fortune he had, and by the Artifices of the Lord Digby, was too eafily believ'd. He inform'd the King with all imaginable confidence, "that if, by the politive Command of the Prince, contrary to his opinion and advice, his "Forces had not been taken from him, and applied to the Siege of Taunton, he had doubtless totally ruin'd all Waller's Forces, and prevented the coming of those Parties who had given "his Majesty so much trouble at Oxford: that he had been "always used, upon his resort to the Prince, with great dis-" respect, being not call'd into the Council, but put to an at-"tendance without, amongst inferior Suiters; and then told many particular passages at Bridgewater, of which he raised advantage to himself, upon the prejudice he begot to others.

WHEREAS the truth of the design upon Taunton is before set down, with all the circumstances; and Waller was march'd beyond Salisbury, before the Lord Garing knew where he was; and confessed, there was no overtaking him; and

With these triumphant Orders, the Lord Goring return'd into the The Lord West; where we shall now leave him, and wait upon his Ma-Goring jesty, in his unfortunate march, until we find cause enough fent back into lament that Counsel, which so fatally dismissed Goring, and

When Goring was thus separated from the King's Army, his Majesty march'd to Evelbam; and in his way, drew out his Garrison from Cambden-House; which had brought no other benefit to the Publick, than the enriching the licentious Governour thereof; who exercised an illimited Tyranny over the whole Country, and took his leave of it, in wantonly burning the Noble Structure, where he had too long inhabited, and which, not many years before, had cost above thirty thousand pounds the building. or rather storm'd and taken for want of Men to defend the Works; and the Governour, and all the little Garrison made Prisoners. The loss of this place was an ill Omen to the succeeding Summer, and, upon the matter, cut off all the intercourse between Worcester, and Oxford; nor was it at all repair'd by the taking of Hawkesly-House in Worcester-shire; which the Rebels had fortified, and made strong, and which the King's Army took in two days, and therein the Governour, and one hundred and twenty Prisoners, who serv'd to Marches of redeem those who were lost in Evesbam. And so, by easy and flow marches the Army profecuted their way towards Chefter. the King's Army to-But, in Stafford-shire, the Lord Byron, who was Governour North, whilf of Chefter, met the King; and inform'd him, "that the Re-"bels, upon the noise of his Majesty's advance, were drawn Sr Thomas "off; and so there was no more to be done, but to prosecute the with his, sate Northern design; which was now intended, and the Army down before upon it's march accordingly, when Intelligence was brought, "that Fairfax had fent a strong Party to relieve Taunton, and was Himself, with his Army, sate down before Oxford. This could not but make some alteration, at least a pause in the Execution of the former Counsels: and yet Oxford was known to be in so good a Condition, that the loss of it could not in any degree be apprehended, and nothing could more reasonably have been wish'd, than that Fairfax should be throughly engaged before it: And it was concluded, "that the best way to "draw him from thence, would be to fall upon fome place " possessed by the Parliament.

The King takes Leicefter.

THEY had no Town to confiderable near the place where storms, and the King then was, as Leicester; in which there was a good Garrison, under the Command of Sr Robert Pye; and Prince Rupert, who was always pleased with any brisk attempt, chearfully entertain'd the first motion, and sent Sr Marmaduke Langdale forthwith to furround it (which was of great extent) with his Horse; and the next day, being the last of May, the whole Army was drawn about the Town, and the Prince, having taken a view of it, Commanded a Battery to be forthwith raised against an old high stone Wall, on the South side of the Town; which, by his own continued prefence, was finish'd with admirable diligence: which done, he fent a Summons to the Governour; who return'd not such an Answer as was required. Thereupon, the Battery began to play; and, in the space of four hours, made such a Breach, that it was thought Counselable, the same Night to make a general Asfault with the whole Army, in feveral places; but principally at the Breach; which was defended with great Courage, and Resolution; insomuch, that the King's Forces were twice repulsed with great loss, and slaughter; and were even ready to draw draw off in despair: when another Party, on the other fide of the Town, under the Command of Colonel Page, seconded by a Body of Horse that came but that day from Newark, and, putting themselves on Foot, advanced, with their Swords and Pistols, with the other, enter'd the Town; and made way for their Fellows to follow them: fo that, by the break of day, the Affault having continued all the Night, all the King's Army enter'd the Line. Then the Governour, and all the Officers and Soldiers, to the Number of twelve hundred, threw down their Armes, and became Prisoners of War; whilft the Conquerors purfued their advantage, with the usual Licence of Rapine, and Plunder, and miferably fack'd the whole Town, without any distinction of Persons, or Places; Churches, and Hospitals, as well as other Houses, were made a Prey to the enraged, and greedy Soldier, to the exceeding regret of the King; who well knew, that, how disaffected soever that Town was generally, there were yet many who had faithful hearts to him, and who he heartily wish'd might be distinguish'd from the rest: but those Seasons admit no difference of Persons. Though the place was well gotten, because so little time had been spent in the getting it, yet it was not without very considerable loss on the King's side; there being near two hundred Soldiers dead upon the places of Affault, with many Officers Colonel Saint George, and others of Name; belides many more wounded, and maimed. The King presently made the Lord Loughborough, a younger Son of the Earl of Huntington, and one who had ferv'd him eminently from the beginning of the War, Governour of Leicester; and Sr Matthew Appleyard, a Soldier of known Courage and Experience, his Lieutenant Governour.

THE taking of Leicester, the chief Town of that Province, even as foon as he came before it, and in that manner, purely by an Act of great Courage, gave the King's Army great reputation, and made a wonderful impression of terror upon the hearts of those at Westminster; who now revolv'd the conditions, which were offer'd at Uxbridge; which they had re-They began to curse their new model; and to reproach those who had perswaded them " so ingratefully to "throw off their old General, who was ready to foment all "their discontents. It was not above twenty days, that the "King's Army had been in the Field, and in that short time, "it had reduced two strong Garrisons of Theirs, without "giving the Soldiers any conditions, Hawkefly-House in Wor-"cester-shire, and the Town of Leicester : whilit their new "General Fairfax had only faced Oxford at a distance, to try "whether the Ladies would prevail for the giving up of the "Town, to pacify their fears; and had attempted to take a " poor

"poor House that lay near, Borstall-House, and had been beaten from thence with considerable loss, and had drawn off from both, very little to his Honour. These discourses were so publick in the City, and had so much Credit in both Houses of Parliament, that they exceedingly desired Peace, and exercised their thoughts only how they might revive the old Treaty, or set a new one on soot; when the evil Genius of the Kingdom in a moment shifted the whole Scene.

LEICESTER was a Post, where the King might, with all possible Convenience and Honour, have fate still, till his Army might have been recruited, as well as throughly refreshed. Colonel Gerrard was upon his march towards him from Wales, with a Body of three thousand Horse and Foot: and he had reason to expect, that the Lord Goring would be very shortly with him with his Horse; for he was not departed from the King above four or five days, with those Orders which are mention'd before (and with which he was fo well pleased) but that the King saw cause to repent his separation, and fent other Orders to recal him as foon as was possible. But the King's fate, and the natural unsteadiness, and irrefolution of those about him, hurried him into Counfels very disagreeable to the posture he was in. He knew not that Fairfax was gone from Oxford; and the Intelligence which some Men pretended to have receiv'd from thence, was, "that it was in diffres. The Duke of York remain'd there; the Council, many Lords and Ladies, who fent Intelligence to their Friends, and all the Magazines were there; and if all these should fall into the Enemies hands, Leicester would appear a very poor recompence. These particulars being unskilfully, yet warmly pressed by those who could not be understood to mean amiss, the King resolv'd to march directly for Oxford; and in order thereunto, within five days after the taking of Leicester, he appointed the Rendezvous for his Army; where he might yet very reasonably have been discouraged from prosecuting that intention; for it then appear'd evidently, how very much it was weaken'd by, and fince that Action, by the loss of those who were killed and wounded in the Storm; by the absence of those who were left behind in the Garrison; and by the running away of very many with their Plunder, who would in few days have return'd.

THE number of the King's Foot which remain'd, did not amount to above three thousand five hundred; which was not a Body sufficient to Fight a Battle for a Crown. Then, all the Northern Horse, who had promised themselves, and were promised by the King, that they should go into their own Country, were so displeased with this new Resolution, that they were with great difficulty restrain'd from Disbanding; and, though they were at last prevail'd with to march, were not enough recover'd to be depended upon in any fuddain Action. Notwithstanding all this, the march was continu'd; the next day, at Harborough, the Intelligence came "that "Fairfax was drawn off from Oxford, without having ever Sr Thomas "approached to near it, as to discharge one Piece of Cannon Fairfax "upon it; that he had been beaten off from Borftal-House from Ox-"with the loss of Officers, as well as Soldiers; and that, he ford. " was marched with his whole Army to Bucking ham. But this kindled a greater appetite to find him out, than there was before. Indeed there was less reason to march Northward, since they might well apprehend the Scotish Army in their Face, and Fairfax in their Rear. But there was the same reason still for their retiring back to Leicester, or to Worcester, where they might expect, and could not fail of an Addition of Forces to the Army; and where the Enemy, who must now be oblig'd to find them out, must come with many disadvantages. These Considerations were all laid aside, and every body believ'd, that Fairfax his Army was much dispirited, by having fail'd in their two first Enterprizes; and that it was now led out of the way, that it might recover Courage, before it should be brought to Fight with so Victorious Troops, as the King's were: and therefore, that it was belt to find them out, whilst their fear was yet upon them: all Men concluding that to be true, which their own wishes suggested to them. So the Army marched to Daventry in Northampton-Shire: where, for want of knowing where the Enemy was, or what he intended to do, the King remain'd in a quiet posture the space of five days.

UPON the thirteenth of June, the King receiv'd Intelligence, that Fairfax was advanced to Northampton, with a strong Army; much superior to the Numbers he had formerly been advertised of. Whereupon, his Majesty retir'd the next day to Harborough; and meant to have gone back to Leicester, that he might draw more Foot out of Newark, and stand upon his defence, till the other Forces which he expected, could come up to him. But, that very Night, an Alarm was brought to Harborough, that Fairfax himself was Quarter'd within fix Miles. A Council was prefently call'd. the former Resolution of retiring presently laid aside, and a new one as quickly taken, "to Fight; to which there was always an immoderate appetite, when the Enemy was within any distance. They would not stay to expect his coming, but would go back to meet him. And fo, in the Morning early, being Saturday the fourteenth of June, all the Army was drawn up, upon a rifing ground of very great advantage about a Mile South from Harborough (which was left at their back) and there put in order to give or receive the Charge. The main Body of the Foot was led by the Lord Aftley (whom the King had lately made a Baron) confifting of about two thousand and five hundred Foot; the right Wing of Horse, being about two thousand, was led by Prince Rupert; the lest Wing, consisting of all the Northern Horse, with those from Newark, which did not amount to above sixteen hundred, was Commanded by Sr Marmaduke Langdale; in the Reterve, were the King's Life-Guard, Commanded by the Earl of Lindsey, and Prince Rupert's Regiment of Foot (both which did make very little above eight hundred) with the King's Horse-Guards, Commanded by the Lord Bernard Stuart (newly made Earl of Lichsteld) which made that day about five hundred Horse.

THE Army, thus disposed in good order, made a stand on that ground to expect the Enemy. About eight of the Clock in the Morning, it began to be doubted, whether the Intelligence they had receiv'd of the Enemy was true. Upon which the Scoutmaster was sent to make farther discovery; who, it feems, went not far enough; but return'd and averr'd, "that he had been three or four Miles forward, and could "neither discover, nor hear any thing of them: presently, a report was raised in the Army, "that the Enemy was retired. Prince Rupert thereupon drew out a Party of Horse and Musqueteers, both to discover, and engage them, the Army remaining still in the same place, and posture they had been in. His Highness had not march'd above a mile, when he receiv'd certain Intelligence of Their advance, and in a short. time after, he saw the Van of their Army, but it seems not so diffinctly, but that he conceiv'd they were retiring. Whereappon, he advanced nearer with his Horse, and fent back; "that the Army should march up to him; and the Messenger who brought the Order, faid, "that the Prince defired they Mihould make halt. Hereupon the advantage ground was quitted, and the excellent order they were in, and an advance made towards the Enemy, as well as might be. By that time they had march'd about a mile and an half, the Horse of the Enemy was discern'd to stand upon a high ground about Nafeby; whence, feeing the manner of the King's march, in a full Campagne, they had leifure and opportunity to place themselves, with all the advantages they could defire. The Prince's natural heat, and impatience, could never endure an Enemy long in his view; nor let him believe that they had the courage to endure his Charge. Thus the Army was engaged before the Cannon was turn'd, or the ground made choice of upon which they were to Fight: so that Courage was only to be relied upon, where all Conduct failed fo much.

IT was about ten of the Clock, when the Battle began: The Battle The first Charge was given by Prince Rupert; who, with his of Naseby. own, and his Brother Prince Maurice's Troop, perform'd it with his usual vigour; and was fo well seconded, that he bore down all before him, and was Master of fix pieces of the Re-bels best Cannon. The Lord Astley, with his Foot, though against the Hill, advanced upon Their Foot; who discharged their Cannon at them, but over-shot them, and so did their Musqueteers too. For the Foot on either fide hardly faw each other till they were within Carabine-shot, and so only gave one Volly; the King's Foot, according to their usual custom, falling in with their Swords, and the But-ends of their Mulquets; with which they did very notable execution, and put the Enemy into great disorder and confusion. The right Wing of Horse and Foot being thus fortunately engaged and advanced, the left Wing, under St Marmaduke Langdale, in five Bodies, advanced with equal refolution; and was encounter'd by Cromwell, who Commanded the right Wing of the Enemies Horse, with seven Bodies greater, and more numerous than either of the other; and had, belides the Odds in number, the advantage of the ground; for the King's Horse were obliged to march up the Hill, before they could Charge them: yet they did their duty, as well as the place, and great inequality of Numbers would enable them to do. But being flanked on both fides by the Enemies Florse, and prefied hard, before they could get to the top of the Hill, they gave back, and fled farther and fafter than became them. Four of the Enemies Bodies, close, and in good order, follow'd them, that they might not rally again; which they never thought of doing; and the rest Charged the King's Foot, who had till then so much the advantage over Theirs; whilst Prince Rupert, with the right Wing, pursued those Horse which he had broken and defeated.

The King's Reserve of Horse, which was his own Guards, with Himself in the head of them, were even ready to Charge these Horse who pursued his lest Wing, when on a suddam, such a Pannick sear seised upon them, that they all run near a quarter of a mile without stopping; which happen'd upon an extraordinary accident, that hath seldom sallen out, and might well disturb and disorder very resolute Troops, as those were, and the best Horse in the Army. The King, as was said before, was even upon the point of Charging the Enemy, in the head of his Guards, when the Earl of Carnewarth, who rode next to him (a Man never suspected for insidelity, nor yet one from whom the King would have receiv'd Counsel in such a case) on a suddain, said his hand on the bridle of the King's Horse, Horse, and swearing two or three full Mouthed Scotish Oaths (for of that Nation he was) said, "will you go upon your death in an instant? and before his Majesty understood what he would have, turn'd his Horse round; upon which a word run through the Troops, "that they should march to the right "hand; which led them both from Charging the Enemy, and assisting their own Men. Upon this they all turn'd their Horses, and rode upon the Spur, as if they were every Man to shift for himself.

IT is very true that, upon the more Souldierly word fand, which was fent after them, many of them return'd to the King; though the former unlucky word carried more from him. By this time, Prince Rupert was return'd with a good Body of those Horse, which had attended him in his prosperous Charge on the right Wing; but they having, as they thought, acted their parts, could never be brought to rally themselves again in order, or to Charge the Enemy. That différence was observ'd all along, in the discipline of the King's Troops, and of those which march'd under the Command of Fairfax, and Cromwell (for it was only under Them, and had never been remarkable under Esfex, or Waller) that, though the King's Troops prevail'd in the Charge, and routed those they Charged, they feldom rallied themselves again in order, nor could be brought to make a fecond Charge again the fame day: which was the reason, that they had not an entire Victory at Edge-hill: whereas the others Troops, if they prevail'd, or though they were beaten, and routed, presently rallied again, and stood in good order, till they receiv'd new Orders. All that the King and Prince could do, could not rally their broken Troops, which stood in sufficient Numbers upon the Field, though they often endeavour'd it, with the manifest hazard of their own Persons. So that, in the end, the King was compell'd to quit the Field; and to leave Fairfax Malter of all his Foot, Cannon, and Baggage; amongst which was his his own Cabinet, where his most secret Papers were, and Letters between the Queen and Him; of which they shortly after made that barbarous use as was agreeable to their Natures, and publish'd them in Print; that is, so much of them, as they thought would asperse either of their Majesties, and improve the prejudice they had raised against them; and conceal'd other parts, which would have vindicated them from many particulars with which they had afperfed them.

prime Quality, dead upon the fpot; whose Memories ought to be preferv'd. The Enemy left no manner of Cruelty unexercised that day; and in the pursuit kill'd above one hundred Women, whereof some were the Wives of Officers of Quali-The King and Prince Rupert, with the broken Troops, marched by Leicester that Night to Ashby de la Zouch; and The King the next day to Lichfield; and continued two days march retires by more, till they came to Bewdley in Worcester-shire; where Elichsteld to they rested one day; and then went to Hereford with form they rested one day; and then went to Hereford, with some thence to disjoynted imagination, that they might, with those Forces Hereford. under Gerrard, who was General of South Wales, and was indeed upon his march, with a Body of two thousand Horse and Foot, be 'able to have raised a new Army. At Hereford, Thence Prince Rupert, before any form'd Counsel was agree'd upon, Prince Ruwhat the King should do next, left the King, and made hast pert retires to Briftol, that he might put that place into a condition to Briftol. relift a Powerful and Victorious Enemy; which, he had reafon to believe, would in a short time appear before it. No thing can be here more wonder dat, than that the King should amuse himself about forming a new Army in Counties which had been vexed, and worn out with the oppressions of his own Troops, and the Licence of those Governours, whom he had put over them; and have not immediately repaired into the West, where he had an Army already form'd, and a People, generally, well devoted to his Service, whither all his broken Troops, and General Gerrard, might have transported themselves, before Fairfax could have given them any interruption; who had somewhat to do, before he could bend his course that way: of which unhappy omission we shall have too much occasion to take more notice, after we have again visited the West.

THE Sickness which infested Bristol, and which was thought The Affairs to be the Plague, had made it necessary for the Prince of of the West Wales to remove from thence : and no place was thought foin the mean convenient for his residence as Barnstable, a pleasant Town time. in the North part of Devon-shire, well Fortified, with a good Garrison in it, under the Command of Sr Allen Appley. And as his Highness was upon his way thither, he received the Orders which the Lord Goring, who was now return'd, had procured from the King; which he carefully transmitted to his Highness, assoon as he arrived. At the same time, the Lord Colepepper received another Letter from the Lord Digby, dated four days after the former Orders, by which he fignified "the "King's express pleasure, that the Lord Goring should Com-"mand those Forces in Chief; that Sr Richard Greenvil should "be Major General of the whole Army; that Sr John Berk-"ley, as Colonel General of Deven and Cornwal, should in-

Uu

"tend the work before Plymouth; and that Prince Rupert would fend his Ratification of all these; that the Lord Hop"ton should attend his Charge at the Army, as General of the Artillery. To which purpose, his Majesty with his own hand writ to the Lord Hopton; "and that the Prince should not be in the Army, but keep his residence in a safe Garrifon; and There, by the advice of his Council, manage and improve the business of the West, and provide reserves, and reinforcements for the Army; with an Intimation, "that "Mr Smith's House, near Bristol, would be a convenient place " for his residence.

THE Prince and Council were much amazed at these Orders and Resolutions, so different from those which had been made; and therefore they thought it fit to conceal them, till they might represent faithfully to his Majesty the state and condition of those parts, and their advice thereupon: well knowing, that if it were believ'd in the County, that the Prince's Authority was in the least manner superseded, or diminished, belides other inconveniences, the hopeful Levies, upon the agreement at Bridgemater, would be in a moment determin'd; the Gentlemen who were to raise Regiments, professing, "that they would receive no Commissions but from his Highness. But whatever care They us'd to conceal the matters of those Letters, and to hasten away a dispatch to the King concerning them, the Lord Goring took as much care to publish them; and from that time expressed all possible contempt at least of the Council attending the Prince. However, within three days, there was another change; for the Lord Digby (fending at the fame time express Orders from the King to the Lord Goring to that purpose) by his Letters to the Lords of the Council, of the nineteenth of May, within five days after the former, fignified "his Majesty's pleasure, that "the Lord Goring should march forthwith towards Northampton-shire with all the Forces could be spared; and that "the Prince himself should stay at Dunster-Castle, and encou-" rage the new Levies: it being (I prefume) not known at Court, that the Plague, which had driven him from Briffel, was as not in Dunstar Town, just under the Walls of the Caftle. At the same time, a Letter to the Lord Hopton from the King, order'd him "to Command the Forces under the Prince. The Prince was then, as was faid before, in his way to Barnstable; having left five hundred of his Guards to keep the Fort in Bristol, the Garrison being then very thin there, by reason of so many drawn from thence for the Service before Taunton.

three thousand Foot, which unhappily arriv'd in the very Article of reducing the Town, and after their Line was enter'd, and a third part of the Town was burned. But this Supply raised the Siege, the Besiegers drawing off without any loss; and the Party that reliev'd them, having done their work, and left some of their Foot in the Town, made what bast they could, to make their Retreat Eastward; when Goring fell to opportunely upon their Quarters, that he did them great mifchief; and believ'd that, in that disorder, he had so thut them up between narrow passes, that they could neither retire to Taunton, nor march Eastward: and doubtless he had them then at a great advantage, by the opinion of all Men that knew the Country. But, by the extreme ill disposing his Parties, and for want of particular Orders (of which many Men spoke with great licence) his two Parties sent out, several ways, to fall upon the Enemy at Petherton-Bridge, the one Commanded by Colonel Thornbill, the other by Sr William Courtney (both diligent, and fober Officers) they fell foul on each other, to the loss of many of their Men; both the chief Officers being dangeroully hurt, and one of them taken, before they knew their Error; through which the Enemy with no more loss got into, and about Taunton; notwithstanding which untoward accident, General Goring was, or feem'd, very confident that he should speedily so distress them, that the place would be the fooner reduced, by the relief that had been put into it, and that in few days they would be at his Mercy.

This was before the latter end of May; when, upon the confidence of speedily dispatching that work, all possible and effectual care was taken to supply him with Provisions, and to fend all the new Levied Men, and his Highness's own Guards thither. Infomuch, as he had within few days a Body of full five thousand Foot, and four thousand Horse; which he Quarter'd at the most convenient places; rather for ease, than duty; having publish'd Orders, under pretence of preserving the Country from plunder, and with a promise of most exemplary Discipline, "that fix pence a day should be collected for "the payment of each Trooper; to which he got the Commillioners consent; by virtue whereof, he railed great Sums of Money, without the least abatement of the former disorders: yet he proceeded with fuch Popular circumstances, sending most specious Warrants out, and Declarations for Reformation; sometimes desiring, "that solemn Prayers might be "faid in all Churches for him; and to defire God to blefs "lome attempt he had then in hand; always using extreme Courtship to the Commissioners (whom he barefaced inform'd, "that he was to have, or rather, that he had the ab-Uu 2 " folute "folute Command of the West under the Prince, without re-"ference to his Council) that with his Promises, Proclamations, and Courtship, together with laughing at those Persons they were angry at, he had wrought himself into very Popular consideration; till they found, that he promised and published Orders, to no other purpose than to deceive them; and that, whilst he seem'd with them to laugh at other Men, he made them Properties only to his own ends.

In this conjuncture, the King's Letter came to the Lord Goring, to march towards Northampton shire; to which he return'd an Answer by an Express, before he desir'd the Prince's directions; though he was diligent enough to procure his Highness's opinion for the respit of his march. The truth is, the affurance that he gave of his reducing those Forces within very few days; the leaving all the West to the Mercy of the Rebels, if he went before they were reduced; the danger of their marching in his Rear, and carrying as great an addition of strength to the Enemy, as General Goring could carry to the King, except he carried with him the Forces of the feveral Garrisons, which were then joyn'd to him, made it very Counselable to fuspend a present Obedience to those Orders, till his Majesty might receive the full and true State of his Affairs in those parts; to which purpose, an express was sent likewise by his Highness to the King. In the mean time, General Goring was fo far from making any advance upon Taunton, that he grew much more negligent in it, than he had been; fuffer'd Provisions, in great quantities, to be carried into the Town, through the midft of his Men; neglected, and difcouraged his own Foot so much, that they ran away faster than they could be fent up to him; and gave himfelf wholely to Licence: infomuch that some times he was not seen abroad, in three or four days together. At this time came the news of the fatal blow at Nafeby, which freed him from any fear of being drawn out of the west; yet he used no expedition to attempt any thing upon the Enemy, who were exceedingly dilhearten'd; but fuffer'd the Guards to be more negligently kept; infomuch that his Quarters were often beaten up, even in the day time; whilft some Principal Officers of his Army, as Lieutenant General Porter, and others, with His leave, had several Parleys with the Officers of the Rebels, to the very great scandal of the rest; who knew not what interpretation to make of it, at a time that he used to mention the Person of the King with great contempt, and avow'd in all places a virulent diflike of the Prince's Council. Thus, after about fix Weeks lying about Taunton, the Forces whereof he promised to confound (I mean those that marched to the relief of it) within few days, he was forced himself to retire, and fuffer them to joyn with Sr Thomas Fairfax; who in the beginning of July march'd towards those parts.

AFTER the Prince came to Barnstable, though he very The Prince seldom receiv'd any account from the Lord Goring of what of wales happen'd, he was inform'd by feveral Persons of Credit, comes to "that he was much discontented; and expressed a great sense Barnstable. " of difrespect, and unkindnesses that he had received. Therefore it was wish'd by them, "that some means might be "found out, to fettle a good understanding with him, where-"by he might be encouraged to an Alacrity in so important "a Season; and he having appointed to be at Tiverton on such a day, the Prince sent thither St John Berkley, St Hugh Pollard, and Colonel Albburnham, to confer with him, and to know what he defir'd; the Prince having never denied to affift him, in any one particular he had ever proposed, or to grant him any thing he had expressed a defire of. Upon their meeting there, he carried himself very high; talked only of "general neglects put upon him by the Prince's Council; "that he had been promised by the King to have the Com-"mand of the West, but that they had hinder'd it; which "affront he requir'd to have repair'd, before he would do any "Service upon the Enemy; with many bitter Invectives against particular Persons; "whereof, he said, Prince Rupert "had told him that some thought him not a Man fit to be "trusted. They had indeed spoken freely to his Highness to that purpole, upon his very frankly discourling of him. In the end, these three Persons pressing him as Friends to deal particularly with them, what would fatisfy him; he told them, "if he might be presently made Lieutenant-General to "the Prince, and admitted of his Council, and be promited "to be Sworn of the Privy Council, affoon as might be, and "to be Gentleman of the Prince's Bed-Chamber, he would "then proceed roundly and chearfully in the business; other-"wife, the Prince's Council should do the work themselves "for Him. All this being so extravagant, it cannot be thought any Answer could be given to it, especially it being said to them as Friends, and not expressly fent to the Prince.

When the Prince first apprehended the advance of St Thomas Fairfax to the West, he very earnestly recommended to the Lord Goring the state of the Garrisons about Bridgewater, especially the Garrison of Lamport, which was of so great importance, that, being well supplied, it had secured Bridgewater, and all that part of the Country. This Garrison had been settled by the Lord Hopton, upon his first coming down to Taunton, after Vandruske had raised the Blockade that Colonel Windham had laid to it; and St Francis Mackworth (who, having been formerly Major-General to the Marquis of New-

Caftle

Caftle, was now, that Army being disfolved, returning to his Command in the Low Countries by his Majesty's leave) was engaged by him, to take the Command of it till, upon the Prince's coming into those Parts, a worthier Command could be provided for him; and before the Lord Goring's coming to Taunton, he had Fortify'd it to a good degree. This Garrison, from the first Establishment, had been much malign'd by Colonel Windham, who defir'd not to have another Governour fo near him, who was to receive fome of the fruit that he had before look'd on as his own, though never afligh'd to him: and then, upon some differences between S. John Stawel, and St Francis Mackworth, it was more inveighed against: insomuch as at the first coming down of the Prince to Bristol, most of the time was spent in complaints from Sr John Stawel of this Garrison, and of the forcing the Country to work, and contribute to those Fortifications. After the Lord Goring's coming to Taunton, he had, as a compliment to Bridgewater, and to all the Gentlemen, who were grown angry with my Lord Hopton, upon their own fancies, besides the former unkindnesses he had to Sr Francis Mackworth upon some disputes they had Had in the North (where they were both General Officers) very much neglected, and oppressed that Garrison; not only by countenancing all complaints against it, but by taking away all the Contribution assign'd for the support of it, for the supplying his own Army; and expressly inhibiting him by force to Levy those Rates, which the Prince himself had assign'd to him. Insomuch as when the Club-men of the County affembled together in great Numbers, and, having taken some Officers and Soldiers of that Garrison Prisoners, for requiring their just Contributions in Money, or Provisions, came up to the Walls of Lamport, and discharged their Musquets upon the Works, and Sr Francis Mackworth thereupon with his Horse Charged them, and killing one or two of them, forced the rest to run away, the Lord Goring fent him a very strict reprehension for so doing, and politively Commanded him "to do fo no more; nor in "any Case to disturb or injure those People. This brought that Garrison so low, that when it might have preserv'd that Army, it had not two days Provisions in it; Sr Francis Mackworth, having been call'd to wait on the Prince's Perion, as well by his own choice (when he faw the carriage towards him, believing that some prejudice to his Person brought a disadvantage to the place) as by Prince Rupert's advice; who promised, when he left the Prince at Barnstable, and visited Goring, and Bridgewater, "to settle that Gar-"rifon of Lamport, and make Colonel Windham Governour of it.

HERE I cannot but fay fomewhat of the Club-men; who of the Clubbegan then to rife in great Numbers, in several parts of the men in So-Country, about the time that the Prince went from Bath to merfet and Bridgewater, in his Journey to Barnstable; and that night his Dorfet-Highness lay at Wells, which was the second of June, a Petition was deliver'd to him, which had been agreed upon that day at Marshals Elme, where there had then assembled five or fix thouland Men, most in Armes; and the Petitioners were appointed to attend the next day at Bridgewater for an Aniwer. It was evident, though the avow'd ground for the rifing, was the intolerable Oppression, Rapine, and Violence, exercised by the Lord Goring's Horse, that, in truth, they receiv'd encouragement from many Gentlemen of the Country; some of them thinking, it would be a good Expedient to necessitate a Reformation of the Army; others believing it would be a profitable riling for the King, and would grow into the matter of the first Affociation, One and All. Therefore some principal Agents of Sr John Stawel's were very active in those Meetings; and he himself was very sollicitous, that a very gracious Answer might be return'd to their Petition; which was follow'd by some Farmerly Men, and others of the Clergy, both which had good Reputations of affection, and integrity to the King's Service. The Prince expressed a great sense of the Oppressions they suffer'd, by the disorder of the Army, which he promised to do his best to reform; to which end, he writ many earnest Letters to the Lord Goring. But his Highness told them, "that this unwarrantable "course of assembling together, and being their own Judges, "would prove very pernicious: for though many of them " might mean well, yet some active Ministers would mingle "with them, on the behalf of the Rebels, and having once "brought them to a kind of Neutrality, and Unconcernedness "for the King, would, in a moment, be able, against all their "good wishes, to apply them against him; and therefore "treightly inhibited them to meet any more in that manner, except they first listed themselves in Regiments, and chose "Gentlemen of the Country to Command them; to whom his Highness offer'd to grant Commissions to that purpose.

This Answer seem'd to satisfy those who attended on the behalf of the Petitioners, until they were perswaded by some Gentlemen not to submit to it; and so they continued their meetings; many inferior Officers of the Army quitting their Charges, and living amongst them, and improving their discontents. When the Prince went to Barnstable, he gave General Goring Advertisements "of the great danger that "might arise out of the licence that People took to them"selves; and therefore advised him, "as on the one hand,

"to suppress and reform the crying disorders of the Army by good Discipline, and severity upon enormous Transgressors; "so on the other, seasonably to discountenance, and punish those Assemblies of Club-men; which would otherwise, in time, prove as dangerous to him, as any other strength of the Rebels. But, whether it were to shew his greatness, and so, Popularly to comply with what the Prince had discountenanced, or whether in truth he believ'd he should be able to make use of them, and perswade them to become a part of his Army, he did use all possible compliance with them, and would not suffer any force to be used against them. So that they grew to be so powerful, that they kept Provisions from the Army, and the Garrisons; and when he mov'd from Taunton, upon the coming down of So Thomas Fairfax, they kill'd many of his Soldiers; and did him more mischiet, than all the power of the Rebels.

WHEN the Prince came to Barnstable, he received the fatal news of the Battle of Naseby, by the noise and triumphs which the Rebels made in those parts for their Victory, without any particular information, or account from Oxford, or any Credible Persons; which left some hope that it might not be true, at least not to that degree that disaffected People reported it to be. However, at the worst, it concern'd him the more to be follicitous to put the West into such a polture, that it might be able to repair any loss the King had receiv'd; which he might have done, if the Jealousies and Animosities between particular Persons could have been reconciled, and a Union been made amongst all Men who pretended to wish, and really did with, prosperity to the King's Affairs; which were disturbed, and even render'd desperate, by the intolerable Pride of incorrigible Faction. Notwithstanding the Orders, which had been made by the Commissioners of Devon-Shire, for distributing the Contributions of that County, which have been mention'd before, and in which such a proportion was affign'd for the maintenance of the Forces before Plymouth, as in Sr Richard Greenvil's own judgement was sufficient for them; he had still continued to Levy the whole Contribution, which he had done formerly, for fix thousand Foot, and twelve hundred Horse; and said, "he could not submit to "the other division and retrenchment; for that there was "nothing allign'd, or left for the payment of his Men before "Taunton. He was told by the Commissioners, "that they "were now a part of the Array, and liv'd as their fellows did; "that they had receiv'd no Money from him fince their go-"ing thither, but had Had free Quarter as the rest of the Ar-"my; and that it would prove of ill Consequence, and beget "a Mutiny, if they should receive a Weekly pay, when none y

"of the rest did, nor any Army the King had in England: "that he could not but confess, by the State of the whole, "that the dispensation was very reasonable; and that it could "not be expected that the County would be contented to pay "their Contribution for the payment of other Forces, not of "their own County, when their own Garrisons, that were "kept for their defence, should be compell'd for want of pay, "to diforders, or to disband. But that, if he thought any "thing in those Establishments unnecessary, or that he thought "Provision could be otherwise made for them, they would "be contented that the Overplus should be disposed as he de-"fired. He Answer'd none of their reasons; but positively faid, "He would spare none of the Contributions formerly "assign'd to him; though the Commissioners had the same Authority now to take it away, as they had then to dispose it to him; and though it appear'd to be assign'd for the maintenance of so great a Force, as was before spoken of and upon his undertaking, under his hand, "to-take the Town "before Christmas-day on vignation is said ton

WHEN this Account was presented to the Prince, the Transactions found it necessary, and resolved, to confirm what was proposed at Barnsta-by the Commissioners, without which those Garrisons could ble: espe-

by the Commissioners, without which those Garrisons could ble: espenot be supported; yet deferr'd the settling thereof, till he came plaints at to Barnstable, being resolv'd speedily to go thither; and, be-gainst Sr R fore his coming thither, had sent to the Commissioners both Greenvil.

fore his coming thither, had fent to the Commissioners both Greenvil. of Devon and Cornwal to attend him; which they did within a day or two after he came thither, together with S. John Berkley, and Sr Richard Greenvil. The Commissioners for Devon very earnestly pressed the settling the Contributions in the manner before proposed, and the regulating the Exorbitant Power of St Richard Greenvil, who raised what Money he pleased, and committed what Persons he pleased; and the Commissioners from Cornwal presented a very sharp complaint against him, in the Name of the whole County, for several Exorbitances, and strange Acts of Tyranny exercised upon them: "That he had committed very many honest substan-"tial Men, and all the Constables of the East part of the "County, to Lydford Prison in Devon-shire, for no offence, "but to compel them to Ranfom themselves for Money; and "that his Troops had committed fuch outrages in the Coun-"try, that they had been compell'd, in open Sessions, to de-"clare against him; and to Authorize the Country, in case "that he should send his Troops in such manner, to rile, and "beat them out; which Declaration was produced, fign'd by all the Commissioners, who were most eminently and zealously affected to his Majelty; and was indeed no other than a denouncing War against Greenvil; and was excused by them

"as an act of necessity to compose the People, who would "otherwise in the instant have risen, and cut the Throats of "all his Men. So that, whoever would have made a judgement, upon what he heard from the Commissioners of Devon and Cornwal at that time, must have concluded, that Sr Richard Greenvil was the most justly odious to both Counties, that can be imagin'd. And no doubt he had behaved himself with great Pride, and Tyranny over them; though the Discipline he exercised over his Men at Phymouth, in keeping them from committing any diforder, or offering the least prejudice to any Man (which, confidering the great affignment of Money he had, and the small Numbers of Men, was no hard matter to do) had raifed him much Credit among the Country People, who had liv'd long under the Licence of Prince Maurice's Army; and the fame of it had extended his Reputation to a greater distance.

THERE hath been too much faid already, to discover the nature and the temper of this Gentleman, if the current of this discourse did not make it absolutely necessary to mention many particulars, with which the Prince was troubled almost in all places, and which exceedingly diforder'd the whole bufinels of Devon and Cornwal; and, indeed, thereby the whole West. There was one particular that made a great noise in the Country: shortly after he was deputed to that Charge before Plymouth, upon the hurt of Mr Digby, one Brabant, an Atturney at Law (who had heretofore follicited the great Suit against Sr Richard in the Star-Chamber, on the behalf of his Wife and the Earl of Suffolk, living in those parts, and having always very honeftly behaved himfelf towards the King's Service) knowing, it feems, the nature of the Gentleman, refolv dnot to venture himself within the Precincts where he Commanded; and therefore intended to go to some more secure Quarter; but was taken in his Journey, having a Mountero on his head. Sr Richard Greenvil had laid wait to apprehend him; and he likewise had conceal'd his Name; but, being now brought before Sr Richard, was immediately, by his own direction, without any Council of War, because he said he was difguifed, hanged as a Spie: Which feem'd fo strange and incredible, that one of the Council ask'd him, "whether it was "true? And he answer'd very unconcernedly, "yes, he had "hanged him, for he was a Traytor, and against the King; and "that he had taken a Brother of his, whom he might have "hanged too, but he had fuffer'd him to be exchanged. He faid, "he knew the Country talked, that he hanged him for "revenge, because he had sollicited a cause against him; but "that was not the cause; though, having play'd the Knave with "him, he faid fmiling, "he was well content to find a just of-"calion to punish him.

THE Prince was very unwilling to enter to far, and fo particularly upon the passionate complaint of either County, as thereby to be compell'd to censure, or to discountenance Sr Richard Greenvil; who, he thought, might be applied very usefully to the Publick Service. Therefore his Highness refolv'd, according to the former delign, to commit the buliness of Plymouth to St John Berkley; who might, without any reproach to the other, discharge such from Imprisonment as had lain long enough there, and who made no other pretence to the Contribution, than according to the Assignments made by the Commissioners; and to dispose Sr Richard Greenvil to the Field, according to his own Propolition; for which there was now the more seasonable opportunity, the Lord Goring having then written to the Prince, "to defire him, that, "in regard very many of Sr Richard Greenvil's Soldiers be-" fore Taunton were run away, infomuch that of the two thou-"fand two hundred brought thither by him, there were not "fix hundred left, and that there could be no fuch expedient "to bring them back, or to encourage the new Levies, as by "his presence in that Army, that he would send St Richard "Greenvil thither; where he should Command as Field-Mar-"Ihal: To which purpose he had likewise written to St Richard Greenvil, perswading him, "that he should fix a Quarter to-"wards Lyme, and have the whole managing of that Pro-"vince: and fo a very good correspondence was beguin between them. Thereupon, his Commission of Field-Marshal of the Affociated Army was deliver'd to him, with direction, "in "the mean time to abide with the Lord Goring; who deputed him to Command in the same place. It is true that he then defir'd, " to continue the Command before Plymouth in Com-"mendam, and to execute the same by his Major General; "but, he was told, that it was otherwise settled by his own "Proposition, and Advice, and therefore that it could not be "alter'd: And indeed would have prevented the latistaction, which was to be given to the two Counties. Then he inlifted very much upon some Assignment of Contribution for the Army; for, he faid, "he neither would, nor could Command "Men who were not paid. But after some sharp invectives against the excess and laziness of Governours, and the needless Contribution assign'd to Garrisons, finding that the subtiltence for the Army must be provided out of Somerset and Dorset, he took his leave of the Prince; and with his Commillion of Field-Marshal, went to the Lord Goring before Taunton; St John Berkley being at the same time dispatched nient to draw off from Taunton, and seem'd to advance towards him, as if he intended to Fight; fixing his Quarters between the Rivers about Lamport, very advantagiously for defence, having a Body of Horse and Foot very little inserior to the Enemy, although by great negligence he had fuffer'd his Foot to moulder away before Taunton, for want of Provisions, and Countenance; when the Horse enjoy'd Plenty, even to Excess and Riot. He had been there very few days, when the Enemy, at Noon day, fell into his Quarters, upon a Party of Horse of above a thousand, Commanded by Lieutenant General Porter; who were so surprised, that though they were in a bottom, and could not but difcern the Enemy coming down the Hill, half a Mile at the least, yet the Enemy was upon them, before the Men could get upon their Horses; they being then feeding in a Meadow; fo that this Body was entirely routed, and very many taken; and, the next day, notwithstanding all the Advantages of Passes, and Places of Advantage, another Party of the Enemies Horse and Dragoons fell upon the whole Army; routed it; took two pieces of Cannon; and pursued Goring's Men through Lamport (a place, which if it had not been with great industry discountenanced, and oppressed, as is said before; might well have secured his; and refifted their Army) and drove them to the Walls of Bridgewater; whither the Lord Goring in great diforder retir'd; and spending that Night there, and leaving with them the Cannon, Ammunition, and Carriages, and fuch Soldiers as were defired, in equal disorder, the next day, he retird into Dewon-fbire; the Club-men and Country People infelting his march, and knocking all Straglers, or wearied Soldiers, on the head. Upon that rout, which was no less than a defeat of the whole Army, the Lord Goring retir'd to Barnstable: from whence (the Prince being gone some days before to Launceston in Cornwal) he writ to the Lord Digby, "that there was " so great a terror, and distraction among his Men, that he "was confident, at that present, they could not be brought to "Fight against half their number. In the Letter he writ, "that "he had then (being within three days after their rout, when very many Straglers were not come up) "between three and "four thousand Foot (Prince Rupert's Regiment being left in Bridgewater, confifting of above five hundred Men, and two hundred in Burrow, and five and twenty hundred Horse, befides Sr Lewis Dives's Regiment, and all the Western Horse) to that, by his Account, confidering that there were not less than one thousand Men kill'd, and taken Prisoners, in those two unlucky days, and that very many were run to Bristol, and others not come to him, it appears, that, when he rose from Taunton, he had a strength little inferior to the Enemy.

Six Thomas Fairfax then no more pursued them, after this running away, but left them time enough to refresh, and recover themselves; whilst he himself intended the recovery of Bridgewater; which was exceedingly wonder'd at; though it was quickly difcern'd, he had good reason to stop there. In the mean time General Goring spent his time at Barnstable, and those parts adjacent; his Army Quartering at Torrington, and over the whole North of Devon, and his Horse commiting such intolerable insolences and disorders, as alienated the hearts of those who were best affected to the King's Service. Instead of endeavouring to recruit his Army, or to put himfelf in readiness and posture to receive the Enemy, he fuffer'd all, who had a mind, to depart; infomuch, as he writ to the Lord colepepper, on the 27th of July, "that he had not above "thirteen hundred Foot left. When he was at Barnstable, he gave himself his usual Licence of drinking; and then, inveighing against the Prince's Council, said, "he would justify that "They had been the cause of the loss of the West; inveighing likewise in an unpardonable dialect against the Person of the King, and discourling much of the revenge he would take upon those who had affronted him: and in this manner he enterrain'd himself to the end of July, writing Letters of discontent to the Prince, and the Lords; one day complaining for want of Money, and defiring the Prince to supply that want, when he well knew he wanted Supply for his own Table; and never receiv'd penny of the publick Collections, or Contributions: Another day, defiring, "that all Stragling Soldi-"ers might be fent out of Cornwal, and drawn from the Gar-"rifons, that he might advance upon the Enemy; and the next day proposing, "that all the Foot might be put into "Garrisons, for that they could not be fit for the Field; so that before an Answer could be sent to his last Letter, another commonly arriv'd of a different temper.

Sr Richard Greenvil grew again no less troublesome and inconvenient, than the Lord Goring. He had lest the Prince at Barnstable, well pleased with his Commission of Field-Marshal, and more that he should Command alone the blocking up of Lyme; which, he resolv'd, should bring him plenty of Money; and in order to that, it was agreed, that, on such a day appointed, "so many Men from the Garrisons of Dart-"mouth, Exeter, and Barnstable, should be drawn to Tiverton; "where they should receive Orders from Sr Richard Greenvil," and joyn with such as he should bring from the Lord Go-"ring, for making a Quarter towards Lyme; and Orders is such from his Highness accordingly. Those from Exeter, according to order, appear'd, at the time; and those from Barnstable and Dartmouth, march'd a day's Journey and more, towards Tiverton; but then, hearing that the Lord Goring was risen from Taunton, made a halt; and sent back to the Prince for Orders; who conceived that, upon the rising of the Lord Goring, the design of fixing a Quarter upon Lyme, would be disappointed, and that it would be necessary to strengthen Barnstable, where his own Person was; and recalled those Men back thither; having dispatched Letters to Sr Richard Greenvil, to acquaint him with the accidents that had diverted those from Dartmouth and Barnstable; but letting him know, "that, if the design held, those of Barnstable

" should meet, where and when he would appoint.

Sr Richard Greenvil took an occasion, from the Soldiers failing to meet, at the day appointed, at Tiverton (though if they had met, there could have been no progress in the former defign) to exclaim against the Prince's Council; and, the next day, in a Coverdirected to Mr Fanshaw, who was Secretary of the Council, without any Letter, return'd the Commission of Field-Marshal, formerly given him by the Prince; and within two or three days after, on the fifth of July, he sent a very insolent Letter to the Lords of the Council, complaining of "many undeferv'd abuses offer'd to him; implying, "that the same were fasten'd on him by Them, on "the behalf of Sr John Berkley; told them, that when they "moved him to give over the Command of the Forces before e Plymouth to St. John Berkley, they had promised him the "Principal Command of the Army under the Prince: whereas the truth is before let down, that the Propolition was made by Himself, both of quitting that Charge, and of Sr John Berkley's taking it, as the only fit Person. He said, "he had hi-"therto ferv'd the King upon his own Charge, and upon his cown Estate, without any allowance; and that, when he "went from Barnstable, he was promised a Protection for his "House and Estate; but when, after he was gone, his Ser-"vant brought a Protection ready drawn, all the Clauses that "comprehended any thing of favour, were left out; and fuch "a Protection fent to him as he cared not for. He concluded, "that he would serve as a Voluntier, till he might "have opportunity to acquaint his Majesty with his Sufferings. Here it will be necessary, upon the mention of this Protection (which he took fo ill to be denied) and the mention of Serving the King, without allowance, upon his own Estate, which he very often, and very infolently objected both in his Letters, and in his discourse to the Prince himself, to say fomewhat of his Estate, and what small allowance, as he pretended, he had from the King for his Service.

WHEN he came first into that Country, he had no Command at all; arm'd only with a Commission to raise a Regiment of Horse, and a Regiment of Foot; of which, he nevel raised Horse or Man, till long after, that he came to the Command about Plymouth. Estate he had none, either there, or, that I have heard, any where else. It is true, his Wife had an Estate, of about five hundred Pounds a year, about Tavifock and other parts of Devon; but it is as true, that it was Convey'd before Marriage, as hath been faid, in fuch a manner, to Friends in trust, that upon long Suits in Chancery. and in other Courts, in the time of Peace, there were several Judgements and Decrees in Chancery against him. So that he had never, fince the difference with his Wife, which was many years before, receiv'd the least benefit, or advantage from it. The first thing the King granted to him, was the Sequestration of all his Wife's Estate to his own use (she living then in the Rebels Quarters) upon which Title he fettled himself in her House near Tavistock; and, by virtue of that Grant, took all the Stock upon the Ground; and compell'd the Tenants to pay him all the Arrears of Rent, or as much as he faid was in Arrear; which amounted to a very confiderable value. When Colonel Digby receiv'd his unfortunate hurt, which render d him for that time uncapable to exercise his Command, St John Berkley very earnestly, and He only, moy'd Prince Maurice, to confer that Charge upon Sr Richard Greenvil; and, though it was within a County of which he himself had the principal Charge as Colonel General, procur'd a full Commission for the other to Command those Forces in Chief; and deliver d, or fent the fame to him; having, from the time of his first coming down, used him with much kindness. He had not then Commanded long, when the Earl of Effen came into those Parts; whereupon he was compell'd to rile; and after joyn'd with the King.

WHEN the Earl of Effect's Forces were diffolv'd, he was again delign'd for that Service; and before the King left the Country, he granted him the Sequestration of all the Estate of the Earl of Bedford in Devon-Shire, all the Estate of Sr Francis Drake (by which he had Buckland Monachorum, which was his Quarter whilft he block'd up Plymouth; and Worrington by Launceston) in Devon, and the Lord Roberts his Estate in cornwal; all which, and his Wife's Estate, he enjoy'd by the Sequestration granted from his Majetty, and of which he made a greater Revenue than ever the owners did in time of Peace. For belides that he fuffer'd no part of these Estates to pay Contribution (whereby the Tenants very willingly paid their full Rents) he kept very much ground, about all the Houses, in his own hands; which he stocked with such Cattle as he took from Delinquents; for though he fuffer'd not his Soldiers to plunder, yet he was, in truth, himself the greatest plunderer of this War; for when ever any Person had disobey'd, or neglected any of his Warrants, or when any Man fail'd to appear at the Poffe (which he fummon'd very frequently after he was Sheriff of Devon, and for no other end but the penalty of Defaulters) he fent prefently a Party of Horse to apprehend their Persons, and to drive their Grounds. If the Persons were taken, they were very well content to remit their Stock to redeem their Persons. For the better disposing them thereto, he would now and then hang a Constable, or some other poor fellow, for those faults of which a hundred were as guilty: and if, out of the terror of this kind of Justice, Men hid themfelves from being apprehended, they durft not fend to require their Stock; which was from thence quietly enjoy'd: fo that he had a greater Stock of Cattle, of all forts, upon his Grounds, than any person whatsoever in the West of England. Besides this, the ordering of Delinquents Estates in those Parts being before that time not well look'd to, by virtue of these Sequestrations, he seised upon all the Stock upon the Grounds, upon all the Furniture in the feveral Houses, and compell'd the Tenants to pay to him all the Rents due from the beginning of the Rebellion. By these, and such like means, he had not only a vast Stock, but receiv'd great Sums of Money, and had as great store of good Household-Stuff, as would Furnish well those Houses he looked upon as his own. This was his own Estate, upon which, he said, he had maintain'd himself, without any allowance from the King; which, I am confident, befides what he got by his Contributions, which would always pay double the Men he had, and were strictly levied, and by his other Arts, and Extortions of feveral kinds, was more, and more worth in Money to him, than his Majesty bestowd upon all his General Commanders of Armies, and upon all his Officers of State, fince the beginning of the Rebellion to that time. This computation would feem too enviously made, if I should proceed here to take any view of the Services he ever did; and therefore (though they that are very good Witneffes, fay, that notwithstanding all the bold promises of taking Plymouth within few days, "his farther Guards were never "nearer the Town, than the Lord Hopton's head Quarter "was the first day that he came thither) I shall leave that to other Men to make the particular Estimate.

Now when Sr Richard Greenvil desir'd at Barnstable a Protection for his Houses and Estates, it was conceived, that he apprehended there might, under pretence of Claim, some attempt be made upon his Stock by the Owners; or that he seared, that there might be too strict an enquiry, by him that succeeded, for such things as being design'd for the Publick Service, had been applied to his particular private Use; as having, with great importunity (as a thing upon which the Service depended) gotten from the Commissioners of Devon above a thousand Deal-boards, to make huts for the Soldiers, he employed them all in the building a great riding House at Buckland, for his own Pleasure. However, so severe and terrible a Person might easily be thought lyable to many trespasfes, when he should be remov'd from the place where he Govern'd so absolutely. The Protection was no sooner asked by him, than promised by the Prince; but after his departure, his Servant bringing fuch a Protection drawn, as exempted all those Estates which the King had Granted to him in Sequeitration, from the payment of any Contributions (the which had been already so scandalous, that most of the principal Perfons of Cornwal had by that example, and with indignation at it, forborn to pay their Rates; and he was told the ill confequence of it; and, "that no Person there in Council, where-"of some had Had very much greater Commands in Armies "than He, and though others thought their Services deferv'd "any reasonable Privilege, had been ever freed from Contri-"bution) thereupon those clauses were struck out, and the Protection in a fuller manner still than ordinary, fign'd by the Prince; and S. John Berkley, then prefent, declared (of which his Servant was advertised, though it was not fit, for the Example, to put it in writing) "that he would not require any "Contribution for that Estate which was his Wife's, and "enjoy'd by him only by virtue of the Sequestration; and the denying of this Protection was his great grievance. And yet he did not only never pay a penny Contribution before, or after, for all these Estates, but refus'd to pay the Fee-farm Rent, due to the King out of the Earl of Bedford's Estate, being two hundred Marks per annum, though the Auditor was fent to him to demand it; but this was meerly an Act of his own Soveraignty.

AFTER this angry Letter to the Lords, and the throwing up his Commission without a Letter, and so having no Commission at all to meddle in Martial Assairs, he fixed a Quarter, with his own Horse and Foot, at St Mary Ottree, within nine or ten Miles of Exeter; where he govern'd as imperiously as ever; raised what Money he would, and imprison'd what Persons he pleased. In the end St John Berkley, having appointed the Constables of those Hundreds which were assign'd for Plymouth, to bring in their Accounts of what Money they had paid to St Richard Greenvil (which, he protested, he did only that thereby he might state the Arrears, without the least thought of reproach to the other) he caused a Warrant to be read in all Churches in the County (that is, order'd it to be read in all, and in some it was read) Vol. II. Part 2.

"that all Persons should bring him an Account of what Mo"nies or Goods had been plunder'd from them by Sr John
"Berkley, or any under him; with several Clauses very derogatory to his Reputation. This, as it could not otherwise, begot great resentments; insomuch as the Commissioners of Devon sent an Express to the Prince, who was then in Cornwal, beseching him "to call Sr Richard Greenvil from "thence, and to take some Order for the suppressing the Fu"rious inclinations of both sides, or else they apprehended, the "Enemy would quickly take an advantage of those Dissen"tions, and Invade the Country before they otherwise in"tended; and, in their Letter, sent one of the Warrants that Sr Richard had caus'd to be read in the Churches; which indeed was the strangest I ever faw.

HEREUPON, the Prince fent for Sr Richard Greenvil to attend him; who accordingly came to him at Liskard; where his Highness told him "the sense he had of his disrespect to-"wards him, in the fending back his Commission in that man-"ner; and of his carriage after; and asked him, "what Au-"thority he now had either to Command Men, or to publish "fuch Warrants? He answer'd, "that he was High Sheriff " of Devon, and by virtue of that Office he might suppress any Force, or enquire into any grievance his County suf-"fer'd; and, as far as in Him lay, give them remedy. He was told, "as Sheriff he had no power to raise or head Men, "otherwise than by the Posse Comitatus; which he could not "neither upon his own head raife, without Warrant from the "Justices of Peace: that, in times of War, he was to receive "Orders, upon occasions, from the Commander in Chief of "the King's Forces; who had Authority to Command him "by his Commission. He was asked, "what he himself would "have done, if when he commanded before Plymouth, the "High Sheriff of Cornwal should have caused such a Warrant "concerning Him to be read in Churches? He answered little to the Questions, but sullenly extolled his Services, and enlarged his Sufferings. Afterwards, being reprehended with more Sharpness than ever before, and being told, "that, what-"ever discourses he made of spending his Estate, it was well "understood, that he had no Estate by any other Title than " the meer bounty of the King; that he had been courted by "the Prince more than he had reason to expect; and that he "had not made those returns on Hispart which became him; "In short, if he had inclination to serve his Highness, he " should do it in that manner he should be directed; if Not, he "should not, under the Title of being Sheriff, fatisfy his own "Pride, and Passion (Upon which reprehension being become much gentler, than upon all the gracious Addresses which had been made to him) he Answer'd, "he would ferve the "Prince in such manner, as he should Command; and thereupon he was discharged, and return'd to his House at Worrington, one of those places he had by Sequestration. (It belong'd to Sr Francis Drake) where he liv'd privately, for the space of a Fortnight, or thereabouts, without interposing in the Publick business. Let us now see how this Tragedy was acted in other places.

We left the King at Hereford, not resolv'd what course to steer; Prince Rupert gone to Bristol, from whence he had made a short visit to the Prince at Barnstable, to give him an account of the ill posture he had left the King in, and from thence went to Goring to consult with Him: and it was exceedingly wondered at, that when he saw in what condition he was (for he was then before Taunton) and the number of his Horse and Foot (which every body then thought had been his business to be inform'd of) he did not then hasten advice to the King, for his speedy repair thither; but his chief care was to secure Bristol; which, sure, at that time he made not the least question of doing; and believ'd the Winter would come feafonably for future Counfels.

THE King quickly left Hereford, and went to meet the The King Commissioners for South Wales at Abergaveny, the Chief Town goes to Ain Monmouth-shire. As they were for the most part Persons bergaveny of the best Quality, and the largest Fortunes of those Coun-to meet the ties, so they had manifested great Loyalty and Affection, from ers of South the beginning of the War, by fending many good Regiments wales. to the Army, and with their Sons, and Brothers, and nearest Kindred; many of whom had loft their lives Bravely in the Field: They now made as large and ample Professions as ever, and feem'd to believe, that they should be able, in a very short time, to raife a good Army of Foot, with which the King might again look upon the Enemy; and accordingly agreed what Numbers should be levied upon each of the Counties. From thence his Majesty went to Ragland-Castle, the Noble Thence to House of the Marquis of Worcester; which was well Fortify'd, Raglandand Garrison'd by him; who remain'd then in it. There he Caffle. refolv'd to stay, till he should see the effect of the Commissioners mighty promises. But he found in a thort time, that, either by the continued fuccesses of the Parliament Armies in all places, the particular information whereof was every day brought to them, by Intelligence from their Friends, or the Triumphs of their Enemies in Monmouth and Glocester, or by the renewed troubles, which the presence of their Governour, General Gerrard, gave them (who had been, and continued to be, a passionate and unskilful manager of the affections of the People; as having govern'd them with extraordinary rigour, XX2 and with as little courtesie and civility towards the Gentry, as towards the Common People) there was little probability of raising an Army in those parts: where all Men grew less affected, or more frighted, which produced one and the fame effect. The King stay'd at Ragland, till the News came "that "Fairfax, after he had taken Leicester (which could not hold out longer than to make honourable conditions) "was "marched into the West, and had defeated Goring's Troops at "Lamport; and at the same time, that the Scotish Army was "upon its march towards Worcester, having taken a little Gar-"rison that lay between Hereford and Worcester by Storm; and " put all within it to the Sword. And Prince Rupert fent for all those Foot which were levied towards a new Army, and part of those which belonged to General Gerrard, to supply the Garrison of Bristol: so that his Majesty seemed now to have nothing in his Choice, but to transport himself over the Severn to Briftel, and thence to have repair'd to his Army in the West; which would have been much better done Before, yet had been well done Then; and the King resolv'd to do so; and that the Horse under Gerrard, and Langdale, should find a Transportation over Severn (which might have been done) and then find the way to him, wherever he should be.

Thence to

This was so fully resolved, that his Majesty went to the Water fide near Chepftow; where Vessels were ready to Tran-Chepflow: fport him, and where Prince Rupert from Briftol met him, very well pleafed with the Refolution he had taken, though he had not been Privy to the Counsel. Here again the unhappy discord in the Court, raised new obstructions; they who did not love Prince Rupert, nor were lov'd by him, could not endure to think that the King should be so wholely within his power; and he himself was so far from being importunate that his Majesty should prosecute his purpose, which he had not advised, though he liked it well enough; and so would not be answerable for any success. His majesty himself being too irrefolute, the Counsel was again changed, and the King marched to Cardiff; where he had been very little time, when he was inform'd, that Bridgewater was loft: and then they, who had diffwaded the King's Embarkation for Bristol, were much exalted, and thought themselves good. Counsellors; though, in truth, the former resolution had been even Then much better purfued; for nothing could have hinder'd his Majesty from going to Exeter, and joyning all his Forces; which would have put him in a posture much better than he was ever afterwards. Indeed the taking Bridgewater, which the King had been perswaded to believe a place impregnable, could not but make great impressions upon him, to think that he was betrayed, and confequently not to know whom to trust. It was in truth matter of amazement to all Men, nor was it any excuse, that it was not of strength enough against so strong an Army; for it was so strongly Situated, and it might well have had all those additions which were necessary, by Fortifications, that it was inexcusable in a Governour (who had enjoy'd that Charge above three years, with all allowances he had himself desired, and had often affured the King, "that it was not to be Taken) that it did not resist any the greatest strength that could come before it for one Week; and within less than that time, it was Surrender'd, and put into Fairfax's hands.

I HAT this prodigious fuccess on the Enemies side, should break the Spirits of most Men, and even cast them into delpair, is not at all to be wonder'd at; but that it should raise the hopes of any that it would produce a Peace, is very strange; yet this imagination did so much harm, that Men generally neglected to make that preparation against a powerful and infulting Enemy, that was in their power to have made, out of confidence that the offer of a Treaty would now prevail, and produce a Peace; and every Man abounded so much in his own lense on this point, that they were not capable of any reason that contradicted it. The Commissioners of all Counties, which were the best Gentlemen, and of best Affections, upon whom the King depended to apply the Common People to his Service, were so fully of this opinion, that they made Cabals with the principal Officers of the Army, to concur with them in this judgement, and to contrive some way how it might be brought to pass; and too many of them were weary of doing their duty, or fo much ashamed of not having done it, that they professed themselves to desire it, at least as much as the rest. This temper spread it self so univerfally, that it reach'd to Prince Rupert himself; who writ his Advice to that purpose to the Duke of Richmond, to be presented to the King; who took that occasion, to write the ensuing Letter to the Prince, with his own hand; which was so lively an expression of his own Soul, that no Pen else could have written it, and deserves to be transmitted to Posterity, as a part of the Portraiture of that excellent Person, which hath been difguifed by false, or erroneous Copies from the true Original; and follows in these words.

From Cardiff in the beginning of the Month of Aug. 1645. The King's

Your &c.

WHEN the King came to Cardiff, he was entertain'd with the News, "that the Scotish Army was fet down before Here-"ford, and that, if it were not relieved within a Month, it "must fall into their hands. To provide for this, there could be no better way found out, than to direct the Sheriffs of those Wellh Counties to summon their posse Comitatus, whereby the King was perswaded to hope, that there would be Men enough to wait upon him in that expedition; who with the Horse he had, would have been equal to any attempt they could make upon the Scots. But it was quickly discovered, that this Expedient had raised an unruly Spirit, that could not ealily be suppress'd again; for the discontented Gentlemen of those Counties, now they had gotten the People legally together, put them in mind of "the Injuries they had receiv'd "from General Gerrard, and the intolerable exactions they "lay under, which would undoubtedly be increased, if he "continued in that Government." So that, instead of providing Men to march with the King, they provided a long lift of grievances; from all which they defir'd to be reliev'd before they would apply themselves towards the relief of Hereford. All this was so sturdily urged, that a Body of no less than four thousand Men, of those who were thus called together, continued together many days, and would not be feparated, till the King was even compell'd to give them fatiffaction in the particular they most insisted upon; which was the removal of General Gerrard from having any Command over them; and that Charge was prefently conferred upon the Lord Aftley, the Major General of the Army; who was most acceptable to them; and they afterwards conform'd themselves as much to his directions, as from the distraction of the time, and the continual ill Successes, could be expected by him.

Bur it was the hard fate of the King, that he could not provide what was fit for his own Service, except he provided likewise for the satisfaction of other Men's Humours and Appetites. Gerrard had now, upon the matter, the Command of all the Forces the King had to trust to in those Parts; and he was of too impetuous a Nature, to submit to any thing for Conscience, or Discretion, or Duty; so that the King was compell'd to satisfy his Ambition for this present degradation, by making him a Baron; and which was an odd and a very fantastical circumstance that attended it, for no other reason, than because there was once an Eminent Person, called Charles Brandon, who was afterwards made a Duke, he would be Created Baron of Brandon, that there might be another Charles Brandon, who had no less aspiring thoughts than the former; when he had no pretence to the Lands of Brandon; which belonged to, and were, at that time, in the possession of a Gallant and Worthy Gentleman Sr Thomas Glembam; who at the fame time (very unluckily upon that account) came to the King at Cardiff, with about two hundred Foot, which he had brought with him out of the Garrison of Carlisle; which place he had defended for the space of eleven Months against David Lesley, and till all the Horses of the Garrison were eaten, and then had render'd, upon as honourable Conditions, as had been given upon any Surrender : David Lefley himself convey'd him to Hereford; where he joyn'd with the other part of that Army, and from thence Sr Thomas Glembam (who was by his Conditions to march to the King wherever he was) came to his Majesty at Cardiff, at the time when the Title of his own Land, which came to him by Inheritance, was conferr'd upon a Gentleman of another Family: who, how well extracted foever, was of less Fortune, and, as many thought, of no greater Quality, or Merit. This unleasonable Preferment more irritated the Country, from which the King then expected Assistance, that when they believ'd they had accused him of Crimes which deserv'd the highest Censure, they saw him pretend to, and rewarded in, an higher degree than he could ever probably have arrived to, but for that Accusation. Here the King, after all his endeavours were render'd fruitless, entertain'd a new imagination, that he might get into Scotland to the Marquis of Mountrofe, who had done wonders there; and thereupon left Cardiff; and, over the Mountains of Brecknock, and Radner, passed the Scotish Quarters, and came to Ludlow, before that Army had any notice of his march.

WHEN the King came first to Ragland, he had sent an Express to the Prince, by which he wish'd "that the Lord "Colepepper, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, might, as "soon as was possible, attend his Majesty. The danger of the way was such, and the passage so disticult, that the Messenger came not quickly to his Highness. The Chancellor being then unfit to Travel by reason of the Gout, the Lord Colepepper made all possible hast out of Cornwal, where the Prince then was, and found his Majesty at Cardiff, when he was departing from thence; and waited on him to Brecknock; from whence he was again dispatch'd with this Letter, to the Prince; which, being the first direction the King gave of that Nature, is necessary to be here inserted in so many words.

Your loving Father, Charles R.

AFTER the Lord Goring had lain some time in the ill hu- The Lord mour we left him at Barnstable, he enter'd into correspon-Goring dence with Sr Richard Greenvil; who, he knew well, was as fitting to the uninclined to the Council about the Prince as Himself; and Prince: finding that the Enemy troubled him not, but had given him rest, whilst the Army was employed upon other important Service, They two met privately; and, upon the Encouragement and Money he receiv'd from Greenvil, he writ to the Chancellor a very chearful, and a very long Letter, bearing date the first of signst, in which he inserted several Propositions; which, he faid, had been framed "upon conference "with Sr Richard Greenvil; which he defired might be pre-" fented to the Prince; and if they should be consented to, "and confirm'd by his Highness, he said, he would engage "his life, that he would in a very short time have an Army "of ten or twelve thousand Men, that should march whereco foever they should be Commanded; and should be in as good "order, as any Army in the World: and concluded his Letter with these words; "I see some light now of having a "brave Army very speedily on Foot, and I am sending a "Copy of this inclosed Letter to the King, with this pro-"fellion, that I will be content to lose my Life, and my Ho-" nour,

"nour, if we do not perform out parts, if these demands be granted.

Which the Prince Tranted.

HIS Letter being presented to his Highness, then at Launceston, found so gracious a reception, that the next day, being the second of August, the Prince return'd him an Anfwer of full confent; and the fame day Sign'd all the particulars proposed by him; expressing a further resolution "to "add whatever else should be proposed to him, and within his Power to grant; fo that there was once more a hope of looking the Enemy in the face, and having a fair day for the The next day, or thereabouts, Sr Richard Greeenvil himself attended the Prince, in a seeming good humour; all the Propositions were immediately confirm'd; some of which were, "that S Richard Greenvil should receive such a propor-"tion of the Contributions of Cornwal, and five thousand "pounds of the Arrears, for the payment of the Officers of "the Army; and thereupon So Richard would gather up all "the Straglers, who were return'd into Cornwal from their "Colours; who, he faid, would amount to three thouland "Foot, and he would raise three thousand Foot more in De-"von-shire. So he betook himself again to Action, sending out his Warrants, and Levying Men and Money; having lent two hundred pounds to the Lord Goring at their first meeting, and calling the posse of Devon to meet at several places, where himself was still present; by which, he pretended, he should speedily recruit the Army. But before the end of August, that Friendship grew colder; Sr Richard observing a better correspondence between the Lord Goring, and Sr John Berkley, than he hoped would have been, and hearing that the Lord Goring used to mention him very slightly (which was true) he writ a very tharp Letter to him, in which he faid, "he would have no more to do with him. However he continued as Active as before, being now in Devon, and then in Cornwal, where he Commanded absolutely without any Commission, and very seasonably Suppressed an Insurrection about St Ives, which might else have grown to a head; and hanged two or three fellows, who, I believe, were guilty enough, by his own order without any Council of War; and railed what Money he pleased upon others; then return'd to his House at Worrington, All the Vivacity that had so lately appear'd in the Lord Goring, upon the news of the loss of Sherborne, declin'd; and then there was nothing, but complaint of want of Money, and a Proposition to put the Army into Garrisons; although the Enemy gave them the same leifure, to pursue the former delign, Faitfax being then engaged with his Army before Briftol. read the Letter, which the Lord Colepepper brought to him from the King, he return'd it to the Lord colepepper to keep, and to Communicate it to the Lords Capel, Hopton, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer; for it was a misfortune, that there was not to good Correspondence with the Earl of Berk-bire (through some jealousies that were intused into him) as might have been with'd; and from the Prince's first coming into cornwal, some of his Servants of the best Quality, who had from the beginning been discontented, and upon strange pretences thought themselves undervalued that they were not of the Council, and, fince the King's misfortune at Nafeby, expressed their indispositions with more Licence, and whisperd abroad "that there was a purpose of carrying the Prince into "France, not that they believ'd it, but thereby thought to render the Council odious and suspected, had wrought so far upon the Earl of Berk-shire, that He seem'd to believe it too, whereby they got to much interest in him, that he always Communicated whatfoever passed in Council to them; to that a Letter of so great importance was not thought fit to be Communicated to him, nor to the Earl of Brentford, who (though he was very kind, and just to the other four) was not without his jealousies, and was an ill treasurer of Secrets. They were very much troubled at the light of the Letter, not at the Command of leaving the Kingdom, for, though they had never Communicated their thoughts to each other upon that Subject before, they found themselves unanimous in the Resolution, "that rather than he should be taken by the Re-"bels, they would carry him into any part of the Christian "World. For the better doing whereof, from that minute, they took care that there was always a Ship ready in the Harbour of Falmouth. But it troubled them, "that the King's "Command was for politive for France, against which they "could make to themselves many Objections. Besides that, one of the Prince's Bed-Chamber, who was newly return'd from Paris, brought a Letter from the Earl of Norwich, then the King's Embaffador there, to one of the Council; in which taking notice of a report there of the Prince of Wales's coming thither, he passionately declar'd against it, "as a certain Ruin "to the Prince; of which the Messenger, by His direction, gave many instances of moment. And they were the more troubled, because the Lord Colepepper, who brought that Letter from the King, averrd, "that he had Had no conference "with the King upon the Argument, but had wholely de-"clin'd it, as a matter too great for him: fo that they had nothing before them but that Letter. After two or three fad Debates between themselves, they agreed upon "a Letter to be prepared in Cipher, presenting their reasons, and

"what they had been inform'd concerning France; and there"fore offer'd it to his Majesty, whether he would not leave
"the choice of the place to them, or nominate some other,
"against which so many exceptions might not be made; and
"proposed Ireland, (if the Peace were made there) or Stot"land, if the Marquis of Mountrose was as Victorious as he "was reported to be; withal assuring his Majesty, that in "case of danger, they would run any hazard, or into any "Country, before the Prince should fall into the hands of "the Rebels. This Letter after it was Communicated with the Prince, as the Debates had been, was forthwith sent by an Express.

Towards the end of August, the Lord Goring, after he had, in all his secret discourses, and in the hours of his jollity, spoken very bitterly of the Council about the Prince, as the Authors of all the Miscarriages, sent the Lord Wentworth to Launceston to his Highness, with certain demands, as he call'd them, on his behalf; but with direction, "that before he presented them to the Prince, he should Communicate them to the Lord Colepepper, or to the Chancellor, and be advised

"by them, in what manner to present them.

His Demands were, and so he styl'd them (1) To have a Commission to be Lieutenant-General of all the West, and to Command immediately under the Prince, Garrisons as well as the Army, and to be fworn of the Council affoon as might be. (2) That all Commissions to Officers of the Army, when his Highness is present, be given by the Prince; but that his Highness should Sign none but such as he should prepare for him. (3) That in the Prince's absence he should Sign, and grant all Commissions; and that, if any Governments of Towns should fall vacant, he might have the absolute recommendation of those that are to succeed, or, at least, a Negative Voice. (4) That all deligns of Confequence should be debated, in the Prince's presence, by the Prince's Council, and fuch Officers of the Army as he should choose to assist at it. (7) That the Number of the Prince's Guards should be limited; and many other particulars, which feem'd fo unreafonable, and unfit to be publickly urged, that the Lord colepepper perswaded the Lord Wentworth, to suspend the presenting them; "the rather (as he faid) because the Chancellor "was then absent (being sent by his Highness to Pendennis-Castle, under pretence of giving some direction in the matter of the Customs, but, in truth, to take care that the Frigat provided for the Prince's Transportation might be in readiness, and Victuals be privately made ready, to be presently put on Board, when the occasion should require) "and likewise be-"cause his Highness intended to be shortly at Exeter, where "the Lord Goring, being present, might better consider, and debate his own business; to the which the Lord Wentmorth consented.

FOR the Commissioners of Devon had befought his Highness to interpose his Authority, in the regulating and disposing the Army to march towards the relief of Briftol; declaring, "as the posture of it then was, that both that County, and "Garrisons, must in a short time be as much undone, and lost "by Them, as by the Invalion of the Enemy; that all the "Foot sublitted by, and liv'd upon, the Magazines of the Gar-"risons; and the Horse possessed the other part of the Coun-"try to themselves; and would neither suffer provisions to be "brought to the Markets, for the replenishing their Stores, "nor Warrants to be executed for any payments; pretending "they were to defend their own Quarters; whilst themselves "levyed what Monies they pleafed, and committed all forts "of infolencies and outrages. By this means both before in Somerset-shire, and afterwards in Devon-shire, when the King's Army was forced to retire, the Enemy found great plenty of Provisions in those Quarters, where His Forces had been in danger of starving: as, all about Taunton, there were very great quantities of Corn, when the King's Forces had caused all their Bread to be brought out of the Stores of Bridgewater, and Exeter; which proceeded partly from the negligence, and laziness of the Officers and Soldiers, who would not be at the trouble of threshing out the Mows, and Ricks, which were there; but principally by the Protection given by the Horse; who would not fuffer any thing to be carried out of their Quarters; and fuch as fent their Provisions to Market, were fure to have their Money taken from them in their return. Infomuch as it was affirm'd by the Commissioners of Exeter, "that "before the Enemy had any Quarter within ten miles, there "was not so much provision brought into that City in a Fort-"night, as they spent in a day: which was only by reason of the disorder of our own Horse, General Goring being all this time in Exeter, breaking Jelts, and Laughing at all People, who brought complaints to him; as, one day, when the Fishermen complained to him, "that as they came to the Market, "they were robbed by his Troopers, who took all their Fish "from them, he faid, "that they might by this fee what great "Injury was done to his Men, by those who accused them "of great Swearing; for if they did Swear, you know (faid "he) they could catch no Fish.

Upon these reasons, and the very earnest desire of the Lord Goring, and the Commissioners, the Prince, on Friday the 29th of August, went from Launceston to Exeter in one day; leaving Sr Richard Greenvil (who then seem'd to be in good humour) to bring up the Soldiers in Cornwal, and to hasten his Levies in the North and West parts of Devon. The Army having now lain still from the beginning of July to the end of Angust, without the least Action, or Alarm from the Enemy, and so being sufficiently refresh'd, and, as their Officers said, awaken'd to a sense and a shame of their former amazements, it was unanimously agreed at a Council of War, his Highness being present, "that the Foot should presently ad" vance to Tiverton; and the Horse to the East of Exeter; "and that, assoon as Sr Richard Greenvil could come up with "his Men, they should all advance to the relief of Bristol; which was understood to be in a very good condition; the last Messenger that came thence, assuring the Prince, as from Prince Rupert, that he was sufficiently provided with all Necessaries for six Months.

A design to Petition the Prince to Send Conditions of Peace, prevented.

THERE had been, from the time of the first going of the Prince into Cornwal, several rumours dispersed, as hath been faid, by those who were discontented or angry with the Council, "that there was an intent to carry the Prince into France; which begot infinite prejudice to all that was advised. Of this discourse General Goring had made great use, to the disadvantage of all those whom he defired to discredit, which was indeed one of the Motives of his Highness's Journey to Exeter, that he might discountenance that Report; which had wrought so far amongst the Gentlemen of the several Western Counties, who were retir'd thither for Safety, that there was a Resolution among them " to Petition the Prince to interpole "betwen the King and the Parliament; and to fend a Mef-" fage to the latter with Overtures of Peace: and to that purpose, meetings had been amongst those Gentlemen, to agree upon what Articles the Prince should propose a Peace; every Man declaring his opinion, what condescension should be in the matter of the Church, of the Militia, and of Ireland, upon consideration of what had passed at Unbridge. When my Lords of the Council heard of these consultations, they apprehended great inconveniences might arise from thence to the King's Service, and to the Prince; who, by being pressed by their desires, and importunities, would lose the honour and thanks of the good Success that might attend it: Besides that, if he should send any Message upon their Motion, they would quickly make Themselves Judges of the matter of it, and Counsellors of what was to be done upon it: therefore they were of opinion, "that all endeavours were "to be used to divert, and prevent any Petition of such a na-"ture from being prefented to his Highness; which, with great difficulty, was at last perfected. the property of the state of th

SHORTLY after the Prince's coming to Exeter, the Lord A Confe-Goring being not then well, but engaged in a course of Phy-rence befick, defir'd that he might have a free Conference with one Lord Goof the Council in private; in which, he professed he would ring and discover his heart, and whatever had stuck with him. Prince Rupert delivers up Briftol.

ABOUT the middle of September, the Prince being Still at Exeter, the News came of the fatal loss of Bristol; which, as all ill accidents at that time did, cast all Men on their Faces, and damped all the former Vigour and Activity for a march. However, the former Resolution continued of drawing to Tiverton, and at least of defending those Passes, and keeping the Enemy from Invading Devon: for the better doing whereof, and enabling them to Fight, if Pairfax should advance, the Prince return'd to Launceston; whither he Summon'd all the Train'd-bands of Cornwal, and an appearance of the whole Country; which appear'd very chearfully, and feem'd well inclined to march to Tiverton. In the mean time the fame negligence and disorder continued in the Army, and the Lord Goring, with the fame Licence and Unconcernedness, remain'd at Exeter, to the great Scandal of the Country, and disheartning of the Army. About the latter end of September, his Lordship writ a Letter to the Lord Colepepper; in which he remember'd him of the Propolitions formerly fent by the Lord Wentworth to Launceston; and recounted at large, but very unjustly, the discourse which had passed between the other Counsellor and Him, at Exeter, upon that Subject; in which he charged the other with Answers very far from those he had receiv'd from him; and defir'd his Lordship, "that, by His means, he might know politively what he was "to trult to; concluding, "that without such a Commission as he defir'd, he could not be answerable for the Mutinies "and Diforders of the Army. Whereupon his Highness, upon full confideration of the mischiefs that would attend his Service, if he should consent to the Matter of those Demands, or comply with the Manner of the demanding, fent him word, "that he would not for the present, grant any such "Commission; and wished him "to pursue the former "Counfels and Refolutions, in advancing towards the Enemy;

"all things being in a good forwardness in cornwal to second him. And so there was no further pressing that Overture; however, he presum'd to style himself, in all his Warrants, and Treaties with the Commissioners, and in some Orders which he Printed, "General of the West.

THE suddain and unexpected loss of Bristol, was a new Earthquake in all the little Quarters the King had left, and no less broke all the Measures which had been taken, and the designs which had been contrived, than the loss of the Battle of Nafeby had done. The King had made halt from Ludlow. that the Scotish Army might no more be able to interrupt him; and with very little rest passed through Shropshire, and Derby-Shire, till he came to Wellbeck, a House of the Marquis of New-Castle in Nottingham-shire, then a Garrison for his Majesty; where he refreshed Himself, and his Troops, two days; and, as far as any resolution was fixed in those days, the purpose was, "to march directly into Scotland, to joyn with the "Marquis of Mountrose; who had, upon the matter, reduced that whole Kingdom. During his Majesty's short stay at Wellbeck, the Governour of Newark, with the Commissioners for Nottingham and Lincoln, repaired to him, as likewife all these Gentlemen of York-bire who had been in Pontefract-Castle (which, after a long and worthy defence, was lately, for meer want of all kind of Provisions, Surrender'd upon good conditions; whereby, "all the Soldiers had liberty to repair to their "own Houses, and might live quietly there) whereupon the Gentlemen assured the King, "they were as ready as ever to "ferve him, when they should be required. Whether the wonted irrefolution of those about the King, or the imagination, upon this report of the Gentlemen, that a body of Foot might be speedily gather'd together in those parts (which was enough encouraged by the chearfulness of all the Gentlemen of the feveral Counties) prevailed, or not, fo it was, that the King was perswaded, "that it was not best to continue his "march, with that speed he intended, towards Mountrose; "but that it would be better to fend an Express to him, to "agree upon a fit place for their meeting; and in the mean "time, his Majesty might be able to refresh his wearied "Troops, and to raise a Body of Foot in those parts. To which purpose, Doncaster was proposed as a fit place to begin in : and to Doncaster, thereupon, the King went; and the Gen- The King tlemen fo well perform'd their undertaking, that, within three goes to days, there was an appearance of full three thousand Foot; Doncaster. who undertook, within four and twenty hours, to appear well armed, and ready to march with his Majesty, what way soever he would go.

Nor would the Governour of Glocester suffer them to pass through his Garrison, till they sent him word plainly "that if they might not pass through that Town, they "knew they should be very welcome to pass through Worce-"fer; by which Argument he was convinced; so that he permitted them to go through that Town, from whence they profecuted their march into the North. If, in all this time, they had been pursued by the King's Horse, considering the fmall Body they had of their own, there is little doubt to be made, very many, if not the greater part of that Army, had been destroyed.

But the King's heart was now so wholely set upon the Relief of Bristol, that nothing else was thought upon, which might in any degree delay it. And so the King, from Hereford, advertised Prince Rupert, "that he had raised the Siege of Here"ford, and that the Scots were marched Northward; that he "intended speedily to relieve him; and in order to it, that he "had then commanded General Goring, to draw what force had then commanded General Goring, to draw what force fide of Bristol; and that his Majesty would himself have a "Body of three thousand Foot, drawn out of the several Gar"risons of those parts, which should pass over the Severa, a"bout Berkley-Castle on Glocester-shire side; and that his Horse, "which were then above three thousand, should at the same "time Ford the Severa not far from Glocester (as they might have done) "and so joyn with the Foot; and by this means,

"all things being well concerted, they might hopefully fall on "Fairfax his Quarters on both fides. And the better to bring all this to pass, the King himself went the second time to Ragland, the House of the Marquis of Worcester; sending the Horse to those several places, as might best facilitate the execution of the defign that was form'd for the relief of Briftol.

Bur when the King came to Ragland, he received the terrible information of the Surrender of Briftol, which he fo little apprehended, that if the evidence thereof had not been unquestionable, it could not have been believ'd. With what indignation, and dejection of mind, the King receiv'd this Advertisement, needs no other description and enlargement, than the fetting down, in the very words of it, the Letter which the King writ thereupon to Prince Rupert; which, confidering the unspeakable indulgence his Majesty had ever shew'd towards that Prince, is sufficient evidence, how highly he was offended and incenfed by that Act; which yet he took fome time fadly to think of, and confider, before he would allow himself to abate so much of his natural candour towards him. Assoon as he received that surprising Intelligence, he presently remov'd from Ragland, and return'd to Hereford, the Post he chose wherein to consider the desperateness of the condition he was in, and to enter upon new confultations. To that purpose, he sent Orders " for all the Officers, and "their Troops, which had been fent into Shrop-shire, Wor-"cester-shire, and South Wales, to provide for the relief of " Briftol, to attend him there. And affoon as he came to Hereford, he dispatch'd an Express with this Letter to Prince Rupert.

Hereford 14th Sept. 1645.

The King's Letter to Prince Rupert upon stol.

More Questions might be asked, but Now, I confess, to little purpose: My conclusion is, to desire you "to feek your Sublistence, until it shall please God to deter"mine of my Condition, somewhere beyond Sea; to which end I send you herewith a Pass; and I pray God to make you sensible of your present Condition, and give you means to redeem what you have lost; for I shall have no greater joy in a Victory, than a just occasion without blushing to assure you of my being

Your loving Uncle, and most faithful Friend, C. R.

WITH this Letter, the King fent a Revocation of all Commissions formerly granted to Prince Rupert, and fignified his Pleasure to the Lords of the Council at Oxford, whither Prince Rupert was retired with his Troops from Bristol, "that they " should require Prince Rupert to deliver into their hands his "Commission. And whether the King had really some apprehension that he might make some difficulty in giving it up, and make some disorder in Oxford, or whether it was the effect of other Men's Counsels, his Majesty, at the same time, fent a Warrant likewise for the present Imprisonment of Colonel Leg (who was Governour of Oxford) as a Person much in the Prince's favour, and therefore like to be subservient to any of his Commands. But this circumstance of rigour, made the other judgement upon the Prince thought to be over "that He should be made the first Example of that The mode to many high Enormities, and the ling's Severity, when so many high Enormities, and "Mistarriages of others, had passed without being call'd in "question. And as no body suspected the Prince's want of Duty in submitting to the King's Pleasure, so Colonel Leg was generally believ'd to be a Man of that entire Loyalty to the King, that he was above all temptations: this circumstance of committing the Governour, made the other to be likewise suspected to be more the effect of the power of some Potent Adversaries, than of the King's own Severity.

When the Prince of Wales came to Launceston from Exeter (which was about the middle of September) after the loss of Bristol, and the motion of the Enemy inclined Westward, it was then thought fit to draw all the Train'd-bands of Cornwal to Launceston, and as many of them as could be perswaded, to march Eastward; it being agreed at Exeter, "that, "if the Enemy gave time, the force of both Counties (save "what was necessary to be continued at Plymouth) should be "drawn to Tiverton, and, upon that Pass, to Fight with the "Rebels; for the better compassing whereof, it was Order'd, "that Sr Richard Greenvil should Command all the Cornish "Train'd-bands, whereunto should be added his own three "Regiments, which he had formerly carried to Taunton; who took themselves to be so disobliged, both Officers and Soldiers (as in truth they were) by the Lord Goring, that they were

absolutely disbanded, and could by no other means be gotten together, but upon assurance that they should be Commanded by Sr Richard Greenvil. Things being thus settled, Greenvil seem'd well satisfied, having all the respect, and encouragement from the Prince that was desir'd, or could be given; and without any other indisposition, than that, once in two or three days, he would write a Letter either to the Prince himself, the Lords, or Mr Fanshaw, Extolling himself, and Reproaching the Lord Goring's plundering Horse, and sometimes Sr John Berkley; in all which he used a very extraordinary Licence.

DURING the Prince's being at Exeter, Sr John Berkley had defir'd, "that, in respect his continual presence would " be necessary at Exeter, since the Enemy apparently look'd "that way, his Highness would dispose the Command of the "Forces before Plymouth, to such a Person as He thought fit; "who might diligently attend that Service. There was a general inclination to have fent back Sr Richard Greenwil to that Charge, which it was visible he look'd for; but there were three great points to be consider'd; The first, the pretence that General Digby had to that Command; to whom it Originally belonged; and both He, and the Earl of Briftol, expected it upon this alteration; he being at that time for cover'd in his health, that he was well able to execu-Command: The next, that if it should be offer'd to G he would infift upon such assignations of Contributions, as would make the subsistence of the Army, and of the Garrisons impossible; the last and the greatest, was, that the whole defign being now to draw fuch a Body together, as might give the Rebels Battle, this could not be without the Cornifb Train'd-bands, and those other Soldiers, who had run from their Colours; neither of which, would march without Sr Richard Greenvil; and it was apparent, if he went to Plymouth, those old Soldiers would go to him. Besides, his experience and activity was then thought most necessary to the marching Army; where there was a great dearth of good Officers. Hereupon, it was refolv'd that General Digby should again refume the Charge about Plymouth, but upon any extraordinary occasion, and advance of the Enemy, he was to receive Orders from Sr Richard Greenvil; and accordingly, upon Sr Richard Greenvil's advancing into Devon, and fixing a Quarter at Okington, Digby was order'd fo to do; which he observ'd accordingly.

In the beginning of October, the Lord Goring perswaded the Commissioners of Devon, upon his promise to punish and suppress all disorders in the Soldiery, and that the Markets should be free, "to double the Contribution of the

"County

"County for fix Weeks, and to affign half thereof to his "Army; by vertue whereof he railed vast Sums of Money; but abated nothing of the former diforders, and pressures: and the Money so raised, instead of being regularly distributed amongst the Soldiers, was disposed to such Persons as he thought fit by his Warrants to direct. But no fooner was Sr Thomas Fairfax advanced as far as Cullampton, than the Lord Goring gave over the thought of defending Devon, and, by his Letter of the eleventh of October to the Lord Colepepper, faid, "that he had fent all the Horse, but one thousand, West-"ward, under the Command of the Major General, to joyn "with the cornish; who were to advance; and that Him-"felf, with one thousand Horse, and all his Foot, resolv'd to "stay in Exeter to defend that Town, if the Enemy came "before it; or to be ready to attend their Rear, if they march'd "forward; and therefore defir'd, "that his Highness would "appoint whom he thought fit, to give Orders to the Lord "Wentworth, his Major General, who was prepared not to "dispute Orders sent by any Substituted by the Prince. Hereupon, the Prince had appointed Sr Richard Greenvil " to ad-"vance with the Cornish to Okington, and directed the Major General "to receive Orders from him: But, by that time they two had disposed themselves in Order, as they did very handsomely and chearfully, General Goring changed his mind, and within four days after his former Letter, he retired with his thousand Horse out of Exeter to Newton Bushell; and then fent to the Prince, by a Letter to the Lord colepepper, to know " whether Sr Richard Greenvil should receive Orders "from him; and offer'd to undertake any delign with St "Richard Greenvil, or by Himself, as the Prince should di-"rect; or that if his Presence and Command should be "thought, on the account of any indisposition in the Cornish "towards him, probable to produce any inconvenience to the "Service, he would willingly, for that Expedition, refign his "Command to any Person the Prince would design for it: intimating withal, "that if the Lord Hopton had it, the Lord Wentworth would willingly receive Orders from him. His Highness, the next day, writ to him, "that he committed "the management of the whole to his Lordship; and had Com-" manded So Richard Greenvil to receive Orders from him, "who had then a good Body of cornish with him, and power "to draw off the Men from Plymouth, if there should be "occasion.

THE King's having been in that perpetual motion, as hath been mention'd before, kept the Express that had been fent to him from the Counsellors, upon the first fignification of his Pleasure concerning the Prince's Transportation into France, from delivering that Letter for some time. So that it was the middle of October, before they receiv'd his Majesty's further direction. Then this Letter to the Lord colepepper was brought back by the fame Express.

The King's Letter concerning the Prince of Wales.

Colepepper, "I HAVE feen and confider'd your dispatches; and for this "time you must be content with Refults without the Reasons, "leaving you to find them; Lord Goring must break through "to Oxford with his Horse, and from thence, if he can, find "me out, wherefoever he shall understand I shall be; the "Region about Newark being, as I conceive, the most likely "place. But that which is of more necessity, indeed abso-"lute, is, that, with the best conveniency, the most fecrecy, "and greatest expedition, Prince Charles be Transported into "France; where his Mother is to have the fole care of him, "in all things but one, which is his Religion; and that must "Itill be under the care of the Bishop of Salisbury; and this "I undertake his Mother shall submit unto: concerning "which, by my next dispatch, I will advertise Her; this is "all; So I rest

Your most assured Friend, Charles R.

THOUGH this Letter was writ after the loss of Bristol. yet when it arriv'd, the hopes of the West were not thought desperate; and it was absolutely concluded between the Lords, "that, as the Person of the Prince was never to be in hazard "of being surprized, so he was not to be Transported out of et the King's Dominions, but upon apparent, vilible necessity, "in point of fafety: And the very fulpicion of his going had been, both by the Lord Goring and others, enviously whilper'd, to the great disheartning of the People; so that (befides that an unfeasonable attempt of going, might have been disappointed) they saw that the loss of the whole West, both Garrisons, and Army, would immediately have attended that Action, and therefore they thought, they should be absolv'd, in point of duty, by the King, if they only preferv'd themselves in a power of obeying him, without executing his Command at that time; especially since General Goring thought it not reasonable to observe the Orders, which were sent to him at the fame time, for marching towards the King, nor so much as advised with his Highness, or Communicated that he had receiv'd any fuch Orders; and yet his Highness let him know, "that he was well content, that he should break through with "his Horse to the King; which he might have done. "The state of the King; which he might have done."

THE Enemy, having gain'd Tiverton, made no great halt to the West of Exeter, but spent their time in Fortifying some Houses

And the Major General laid "afterwards at Launceston, that he could not understand the "Lord Goring's deligns; for that, at his going from the Army, "he gave the Officers great charge to preserve their Regiments, "for he had hope to get leave to Transport them; and within few days after he arriv'd at Paris, he fent Captain Porridge into England, to fetch all his Saddle Horses, and Horses of Service, upon pretence that he was to present them in France; though at the same time he affur'd his Friends, "that he was « return-

" returning speedily with Men and Money; which was not the more believ'd by his fending for his Horses.

THOUGH there had been no great Modesty used in the discourses of the People towards General Goring, from the time of his first fastning in the West, especially of the cornish, whom he had most unskilfully irreconciled to him, by his continual neglects and contempts of them (as he would usually before Taunton, when he view'd his Foot, clap an Irijh-man, or one of those Soldiers who came out of Ireland, who doubtless were good Men, on the Shoulders, and tell him, in the hearing of the rest, "that he was worth ten cornish Cowards, the greatest part of his present strength, and all his future hopes depending upon the Cornish, many whereof had reason to believe themselves not inferior to any who had serv'd the King) yet from the time that he left the Army, and went for France, they gave themselves a greater Licence; and declard, "that he had, from the beginning, Combined with the Re-"bels; and having wasted and ruined all the Supplies which "had been fent him, had now left a diffolute and odious "Army to the Mercy of the Enemy, and to a County more "justly incensed, and consequently more merciless than they. "They compared the loss of Weymouth, in the view of his "Army, after he had been in the Town, and when the whole "direction was in him, with the Counter-scuffle at Petherten-Bridge, when two of his own Parties, pursuing the Orders "they had receiv'd, Fought with each other, whilft the Eneec my retired to their own strengths: they remember'd the "voluntary, wanton, incenfing the Country; the discounte-" nancing the Garrison of Lamport, and disfolving it; the eat-"ing the Provisions of the rest; the cherishing the Club-men; "and the lying with his whole Army before Taunton full fix "Weeks (after he had declar'd the Enemy to be in his Mer-"cy, within fix days) and in that time (pretending that he "would in few days starve them) he suffer'd great quantities " of Provisions to be carried into them, through his own "Quarters, and several Interviews, and private Meetings to " be by his Brother Porter (whose Integrity he had before suf-" pected) and the chief Officers of the Rebels: the neglecting "his Body of Foot, during the time that he lay before Taun-"ton, by which he fuffer'd above two thousand to run away. "They talked of the beating up his Head Quarter the day before the Rout at Lamport at Noon-day, for which no "Man was ever called to a Council of War; and that total "Rout at Lamport, as two of the most supine, and unsoldierly "Defeats, that were ever known; before which, or in those "freights, or upon any other occasions of Advice, that he "never called a Council of War to confider what was to be " done; a done; and in that last business of Lamport, himself was so "far from being present, that coming in great disorder to " Bridgewater, he faid, he had loft his Foot, and Cannon; " which indeed were brought off entirely by the care, and " diligence of the Lord Wentworth, and Sr Foseph Wagstaff. "They talked of his unheard of neglecting the Army, after "that Retreat at Bridgewater, insomuch as of between three "and four thousand Foot, which himself confessed he had "after that business (and if his loss had been no greater than "he own'd, must have been a far greater Number) within "fixteen days, he had not thirteen hundred, nor ever after "recover'd a Man, but what was gotten up by the Activity "and Authority of the Prince. Lastly, they remember'd his " lying in Devon-shire from the beginning of July, which was " about the time of his Retreat from Lamport, to the end of "November, when he went to France (which was five Months) "with a Body of above four thousand Horse and Foot; de-"stroying, and irreconciling the Country to the King, and "the Cause, without making the least attempt, or in any "degree looking after the Enemy; whilft the Rebels, by "formal Sieges, took in the Garrisons of Bridgewater, Sker-"borne, and Briftel, and many other important holds.

UPON the whole matter, comparing his Words, and his Actions, laying his doing and his not doing together, they concluded, "that if he had been confederate with the Enemy, "and been corrupted to betray the West, he could not have "taken a more effectual way to do it; fince he had not in-"terest enough by any Overt Act to have put it into their "power; and therefore they who had a greater opinion of his Wit, Courage, and Conduct, than of his Conscience, and Integrity, presum'd the failing was in the latter; towards which opinion they were the more inclin'd, by many discourses negligently let fall by the Enemy in their Quarters, "that "they were Sure enough of Goring; and by Sr Thomas Fairfax's applying himself to the taking those strong places after the Rout at Lamport, without ever confidering or looking after the Lord Goring's Army; which he could not but know confifted of a Body of Horse, equal in Number to his own; and had reason to apprehend those two Populous Counties of Deven and Cornwal, could quickly recruit the Foot; "which negligence (faid they) Fairfax could never be guilty "of, if he had not been well affured, that those Forces "thould work them no inconvenience; besides that, being unpurfued, Goring might eafily have made an escape, and joyn'd with the King, and so have diverted all the Enemies deligns upon the West.

Gering, to defire to be joyn'd with him in any Trust, yet in their opinions clearly absolv'd him from any Combination with the Enemy, or defign of Treachery, and imputed the flow managing the business, at his first coming into the West, and overflipping some opportunities of advantage, to his defire of being fettled in that Command, and so not making haft, left, the work being done, he might be necessitated to leave those Parts, and be call'd to the King; for without doubt, though there was a reconciliation made between Him and Prince Rupert to that degree, that all the Countenance General Goring receiv'd from Court in prejudice of the Prince's Authority, and of his Council, was procur'd for him purely by that Prince; who in one of his Letters to him, at fuch time as he was before Taunton, used these words; "what you "defire in your Letter, on the 22d of May, shall be observ'd; "and affure your felf that Prince Rupert shall maintain Ge-"neral Goring's Honour and Power, and shall lose his Life, "rather than General Goring shall suffer for Prince Rupert; which Letter (as he did any others, which he receiv'd from his Majesty, or the Secretaries, in Cipher) he Communicated to the Company in all his Acts of good fellowship; yet, I say, it was very evident, he was resolved never to be in the same Army with Prince Rupert under his Command; and all his loofe and scandalous Speeches, they imputed to an innate licence he had always given himfelf; and his gross and unfortunate Overfights, to the lazyness and unactivity of his Nature; which could better purfue, and make Advantages upon good Successes, than struggle and contend with difficulties and streights. And they who had been nearest the Observation, found a great difference between the presentness of his Mind and Vivacity in a fuddain Attempt, though never fo full of Danger, and an Enterprise that requir'd more deliberation, and must be attended with patience, and a steady circumspection; as if his Mind could not be long bent. And therefore he had been observ'd to give over a Game, sooner than Gamesters that have been thought to have less Fire. Many other passages must be attributed to his perfect hatred of all the Persons of the Council, after he found they would not comply with his defires, and to his particular Ambition; and both those Pasfions of Ambition, and Revenge, might transport his Nature beyond any limits. But what he meant by his discourse at parting to the Officers, for the keeping the Horse for the Service of some Forreign Prince, was never understood, except he did really believe, that he should shortly return with a Body of Foot; and so that they should not be forward to engage with the Enemy, or else to keep such a dependence upon him from the Officers, that they should always hope for employment under him. WHILST St Richard Greenvil Stay'd at Okington, he had feveral strange deligns; which he always communicated to the Prince, or Lords, in Writing; one of which was, "to "cut a deep Trench from Barnstable to the South Sea, for "the space of near forty Miles; by which, he said, he would "defend all Cornwal, and so much of Devon, against the World; and many such impossible Undertakings; at which they who understood matters of that Nature, thought him belides himfelf. Notwithstanding the Train'd bands of cormwal return'd to their Homes (having stay'd out their Month; which was their first Contract) Sr Richard Greenvil stay'd still at Okington, with his three Regiments of old Soldiers, having barricadoed the Town; the Pais being of very great importance to hinder the Enemy from any Communication with Plymouth. And indeed the Reputation of his being there with a greater Strength than in truth he had at any time, was a great means of keeping the Rebels on the East side of Exeter; as appears by their fuddain Advance, affoon as he removed from that Post; which he did about the end of November, without giving the least advice to the Prince of such his purpose, and contrary to the express defire of the Lords Capel, and Calepepper, who were then at Exeter, and hearing of his Resolution, had written to him very earnestly "not to remove. He suddainly retird with his three Regiments from Okington into Cornwal and Muster'd his Men upon the River Tamar, that divides cornwal from Deven, with express Command "to Guard "the Passes, and not suffer any of the Lord Goring's Men. "upon what pretence or warrant foever, to come into Corn-For the better doing whereof, he caused the Country to come in to work at their Bridges, and Passes, as he had done before, most unreasonably, for the Fortifying of Launcefton; and caused Proclamations, and Orders of his own, to be read throughout Cornwal, in the Churches, "that if any of the Lord Goring's Forces (whom in those Writings he charged with all the odious Reproaches for Plundering) "should offer to come into Cornwal, they should Ring the "Bells, and thereupon the whole County should Rife, and "beat them out; by these unheard of, and unwarrantable means, preparing the Country to fuch a hatred of the Lord Goring, and his Forces, that they rather defir'd the Company of the Rebels; so alienating all Mens Spirits from refisting of the Enemy; and all this without so much as Communication with the Prince, till it was executed.

A BOOT the last week of November, he came himself to Truro to the Prince, on the same day that his Highness had received Letters from the Lords at Exeter, of the extreme ill Consequence of St Richard Greenvil's drawing off from Oking-

ton; upon encouragement whereof, a strong Party of the Enemy was come to Kirton. Whereupon his Highness sent for Sr Richard Greenvil; and, in Council, acquainted him with those Letters, and other Intelligence that he had receiv'd of the Enemy, and defired him to confider what was now to be done. The next day, without attending his Highness any more, but returning to his House at Worrington, he writ a long Letter to Mr Fanshaw of his Advice, which he desired might be Communicated to the Lords; which was, "that "his Highness should fend to the Parliament for a Treaty, "and should offer, if he might enjoy the Revenue of the "Dutchy of cornwal, and that they would not advance to "diffurb him in that County, that he would not attempt any "thing upon them, but that they should enjoy the freedom " of all their Ports in Cornwal for Trade, without any di-"fturbance by his Majesty's Ships: and so, in plain English, to fit still a Neuter between the King and the Parliament, at a time when there was a Body of Horse Superior to the Enemy in those Parts; and when an equal proportion of Foot might have been gotten together; and when his Majesty had not the face of an Army in any other part of England. The Prince was very much troubled at this Letter, and the more, because he found Sr Richard Greenvil had contracted a great friendship with such of his Highness's Servants, as he had reafon to believe less zealous and intent upon the Honour, and Prosperity of the King; and because he had discover'd he laboured very much to infuse a jealousy into the Governour of Pendennis-Caffle, "that the Prince intended to remove him "from that Command, and to confer it upon the Lord "Hopton; to which purpose he had written to the Governour from Okington (when the Lord Hopton, and the Chancellor, were fent down thither to affift him in the Fortifying and Supplying that Castle; which if they had not done, it would not have held out, as it did afterwards) "that the Lord "Hopton had a Commission to take that Charge upon him; "but that he should not suffer such an affront to be put upon "him; for He, and all his Friends, would stick to him in it: Whereas there was never the least thought or intention to make any alteration in that Government.

SHORTLY after that Letter of the 17th, Sr Richard Greenvil writ again to Mr Fanshaw, to know how his Propositions were approved; to which, by direction, he returned, "that "the Council had not been yet together since the receipt of "them; the Lords Capel, and Colepepper, being not then re-"turned from Exercity; and that therefore his Propositions had "not been yet Debated. He proceeded in the mean time in his Fortifications there, and, about the middle of December, the Prince continuing at Truro, he sent several Letters to the Gentlemen of the County "to meet him at Launceston: One of which Letters I saw, to Colonel Richard Arundel; in which, "He desired him to bring as many Gentlemen, and "others of Ability, as he could, as well the disaffected, as "well-affected; for that he intended to Communicate to them "some Propositions, which he had formerly preferr'd to the "Prince, and though they were not hearken'd to There, he believ'd would be very acceptable to his Country-men of "Cornwal: but the Prince's suddain going to Tavistock disappointed that meeting.

SHORTLY after the Lord Goring's going into France, the Prince, being inform'd from Exeter, " that the Enemy, at "the same time having finished their works, which kept the "City from any Relief on the East fide, were now drawing "their Forces to the West side, whereby that City would be " speedily Distressed; thought it necessary to send the Lords Brentford, Capel, Hopton, and Colepepper, to conter with the Lord Wentworth, who lay then at Alb-Burton, fix miles from Totness, and with Sr Richard Greenvil, who was ready to draw some Foot into Devon, to the end that such an understanding might be fettled between them two, that the Service might proceed: their Lordships being directed, by Instructions under his Highness's hand, upon consideration of the state of the Forces, and conference with the Lord Wentworth, and Sr Richard Greenvil, to advise what speedy course should be taken for the Relief of Exeter (the Prince having at the fame time disburfed a thousand pound ready Money to two Merchants of Exeter, for Provision of Corn for that City) presuming that both the one and the other would have been very ready to have receiv'd, and followed the advice which their Lordhips should give.

The place of meeting was appointed to be Tavistock; where every body was, save the Lord Wentworth; but He failing, the Lords, having directed Sr Richard Greenvil how to dispose of himself, went themselves to Alb-Burton, near twenty Miles farther, to the Lord Wentworth's Quarter; where they spent a day or two, but found not that respect from him they had reason to have expected. His Lordship was very jealous of diminution in his Command, which General Goring had devolv'd to him, and expressing himself oftentimes to them very unnecessarily, "that he would receive Or-"ders from none but the Prince Himself; whereupon, and upon the importunate calling for Relief from Exeter, their Lordships "thought it absolutely necessary, that the Prince "Himself should advance in Person, as well to bring up as "great a Body of the Cornish, as was possible (which with-

"out his Presence was not to be hoped for) as to dispose the "Command of the whole Forces in such manner, as might "probably be for the best advantage; the best that was to be hoped for being to bring the Enemy to Fight a Battle; and "that they might be enabled to that purpose, by joyning with the Foot that were in Exeter; which was a confiderable Body. For the conducting fo great a design, upon which no less than three Crowns depended, the Lord Wentworth could not be thought of Interest, Experience, or Reputation enough; and yet there was to great regard, that he should not suffer in his Honour, or the imaginary Trust devolved to him by General Goring, or rather indeed that no notable hazard might be run, by any unnecessary mutation in Commands, at a time when the Soldier was to be led to Fight, that it was refolv'd, "that he should be rather Advised, than "Commanded; and that if he comported himself with that "Temper and Modesty, as was expected, all Resolutions er should be form'd in Council, and all Orders thereupon should "iffue in His Name.

THE next day after Christmas day, the weather being very Tharp, the Prince went from Truro, to Bodwin; and the next day to Tavistock; where the Lords of the Council attended; the Lord Wentworth continuing at Alb-Burton, and his Horse spread over that part of the Country which was at any di-stance from the Enemy. Sr Richard Greenvil, who attended likewise at Tavistock, had sent three Regiments of Foot to Okington, under the Command of Major General Molesworth; which were fecured by the Brigade of Horse under Major General Web, who was Quarter'd near those parts, and the cornish Train'd-bands were to come up within a week; the Blockade before Plymouth was maintain'd by General Digby, with about twelve or thirteen hundred Foot, and fix hundred Horse; but the whole Contribution assign'd for the support of those Forces, was taken by the Lord Wentworth's Horse; To that the Prince was compelled to supply those Men, out of the Magazines of Victual which he had provided in Cornwal for the Army when it should march; and to leave his own Guard of Horse upon the skirts of Cornwal; there being no Quarter to be had for them nearer his own Person.

upon the Prince's coming thither, was, "that affoon as the " Cornifb Foot should be come up, his Highness should march "with those, his own Guards, and as many Foot as might "conveniently be taken from before Plymouth, by leaving "Horse in their place, to Totness; where a Magazine Inould "be made of Provisions for the whole Army, both by Money "I for which the County would yield great store of Provi-"fions) and by Victuals brought out of Cornwal by Sea; for which likewise directions were given: "From that place it "was concluded, that the Prince might joyn with the Forces "in Exeter, except the Rebels should draw their whole Body "between them; and then that Garrison would be able both to relieve it felf, and to infest the Enemy in the Rear; and "the Prince might retire, or Fight, as he found it most con-"venient and advantageous to him. Resolutions being thus fixed, and the Cornish being not expected in full Numbers till the Week following, the Prince chose to go to Totness; where all things necessary might be agreed with the Lord Wentworth, who might conveniently attend there, his Quarters being within fix miles; and where directions might be given for making the Magazine, towards which Money had been return'd out of Cornwal.

THE next day after the Prince came thither, the Lord Wentworth attended him, and was inform'd in Council, what had been thought reasonable at Tavistock; the which he approv'd of; the Prince then call'd to see a List of the Quarters, that thereupon it might be agreed how the whole Army should be Quarter'd when they came together; to which end, the next day, the Lord Went worth brought the Quarter Mafter General Pinkney, who indeed govern'd him. At the first Council, the Lord Wentworth told the Prince, "that he was "to declare one thing to him, at the entrance into business, "and for the prevention of any mistakes, that he could receive "no Orders from any Person but his Highness; the Lord Go-"ring having reposed that trust in him, and given him a "Commission and Instructions to that purpose; which he often repeated afterwards in Council; and, in the Debate of Quartering, talked very imperioully, and very difrespectfully, and one day, after he had been drinking, very offensively to some of the Council, in the presence of the Prince. The time was not conceiv'd feafonable for the Prince to declare how the Army should be commanded, till he had brought it together, and till he had his own Guards about him; and so the Prince, though he was nothing fatisfied in the Lord Wentworth's carriage, only told him "that he would take the Com-"mand of the Army upon Himself, and iffue out Orders as "he hould think fit; and having visited the Port and Garrison Vol. II. THE day before the Prince begun his Journey to Taviflock, he receiv'd a Letter from the King his Father dated.

upon the seventh of November, in these words:

Oxford, 7th of November 1645.

A Letter from the Prince.

Charles, "I LEAVE others to tell you the News of these parts, "which are not so ill, as, I believe, the Rebels would make King to the a you believe : that which I think fit to tell you is, I com-"mand you, affoon as you think your felf in a probable danger "of falling into the Rebels hands, to Transport your felf into "Denmark; and, upon my bleffing, not to stay too long upon "uncertain hopes within this Island, in case of danger as above "faid. For, if I militake not the present condition of the "West, you ought not to defer your Journey one hour; in "This I am not absolutely positive; but I am directly posi-"tive, that your going beyond Sea is absolutely necessary for "me, as I do, to command you; and I do not restrain you "only to Denmark, but permit you to choose any other Coun-"try, rather than to stay here; as for Scotland and Ireland I forbid you either, until you shall have perfect assurance, that Peace be concluded in the one, or that the Earl of "Mountrose, in the other, be in a very good condition; which, "upon my word, he is not now: so God bless you. Your loving Father Charles R.

> THOUGH the intimations in this Letter were strong for a present remove, yet they not being Politive, and the time of the year being such, as that the Prince could not be block'd up by Sea, and so could choose his own time, and having one County entire, and Exeter and Barnstable in the other well Garrison'd, besides the Blockade before Plymouth, and the reputation of an Army, the Council were of opinion, that the time was not yet ripe; and so pursued the former delign of joyning the Cornifb to the Horse, and to endeavour the relief of Exeter; for which purpose, the Prince undertook the Journey before mention'd to Tavistock, the day after christman day; and, at his coming thither, received this other Letter France, though he was nothing farished in the goil add mort

Oxford, the 7th of December 1645.

Charles, "I warr to you this day Month; of which, few days Another " after, I fent you a Duplicate. The causes of my Commands Letter from so You in that Letter, are now multiplied. I will name his Majefty. "but one, which I am fure is fufficient for what I shall now "add to my former: it is This; I have refolv'd to propose a "Personal Treaty to the Rebels at London; in order to which "a Trumpet is by this time there, to demand a Pals for my "Messengers, who are to carry my Propositions; which if "admitted, as I believe it will, then my real fecurity will be, "your being in another Country, as also a chief Argument "(which speaks it self without an Orator) to make the Rebels "hearken, and yield to Reason: whereas therefore I left you "by my last to judge of the time, I absolutely command you "to feek for carefully, and take the first opportunity of Trans-"porting your felf into Denmark, if conveniently you can; "but rather than not go out of this Kingdom, immediately "after the receipt of this, I permit, and command you to reof pair to any other Country, as France, Holland, Oc. whereto "you may arrive with most convenient fecurity as to your "passage; for nothing else is to be fear'd: I need not recom-"mend to you the leaving the Country in the best posture you "may, it to fpeaks it felf, as I shall always do to be, star they would lote all confi Your loving Father Charles R.

His Highness, as he used to do, assoon as he had perused the Letter, which, as the rest, was written in the Lord Colepepper's Cipher, and by him Decipher'd, deliver'd it again to his Lordship, " to be feeretly kept, and Communicated to the other three; for it was by no means yet fafe to trult it farther. They were much troubled at the receipt of this Letter; for, belides that it found them in the Article of the most probable defign had been on foot fince the late difasters, to preferve the West; if they should have attempted to have given Obedience to that Command, the fuddain, unexpected, and unreasonable leaving the Army, would visibly have deelated what the intent had been, and would probably have engaged the People, and the Soldiers (who would have wanted neither Intelligence, nor Instigntion from the Prince's own Servants; of whom the Lords could not rely upon three Men) they being full of hope in the Enterprise they were upon, and full of diflike of the other they were to choose, to have prevented it; in which, they might reasonably have expected affiltance from the Garrison of Pendennis; from which place his Highnels was necessarily to remove Himself. So that if ZZ 2

the Prince should attempt to go, and succeed, the Army, upon that discountenance, must dissolve; and if he succeeded not, there might be a fatal confequence of the endeavour and difappointment. Then, though they had long kept a Ship in the Harbour in readiness, and had at that time another Frigat of Mr Haldunks, yet by its having been carried with so much fecrecy that very few had taken notice of it, they could not be provided for fo long a Voyage as to Denmark, which, with fo important a Charge, would require two Months Victual at least. But that which troubled them most, was the very Argument which his Majesty was pleased to use for his so positive Command; which, to their understanding, seem'd to conclude rather, that his Highness's Transportation (at least without an immediate absolute necessity) was at that time most unseasonable: for if, in expectation of a Treaty, his Maiesty should venture his Royal Person in London, and should be received there, and at the same time his Highness's Person should be Transported out of the Kingdom, by his Majesty's own Commands (which could not then have been conceal'd) it was reasonable to believe, that not only the Rebels would make great advantage of it, as an Argument against his Majesty's fincere intentions, and ther by draw unspeakable and irreparable prejudice upon him; but that his own Council. by which he was disposed to that Overture, and whose Asfiltance he must constantly use, would take themselves to be highly disobliged by that Act; and they would lose all confidence in their future Counfels.

U PON the whole Matter, the Lords were unanimoully of opinion, "that the Relief of Exeter was to proceed in the "manner formerly agreed, and that the Prince's Person was "to be present at it: and thereupon they sent an express to the King, with a dispatch fign'd by the Four who were trusted, a Duplicate whereof was fent by another Express the next day, in which they presented a clear state to his Majesty of his Forces, and the hopes they then had of improving their condition by the Prince's Presence; of the condition of Exeter, and of the Strength, as they conceiv'd, of the Enemy; and of the inconveniency, if not the impossibility of obeying his Majesty at that time. They farther inform'd his Majesty of "the great indisposition, that they perceived in all the Sere vants towards his Highness's leaving the Kingdom; and that the jealoufy was so great of his going into France, that they had reason to believe that many who were very faith-"ful, and tender of his Safety, would rather with him in the "hands of the Enemy, than in that Kingdom; and therefore, "when the time of Necessity should come (which they af-"fured his Majesty they would with any hazard watch and observe

"cobserve) they must prefer the continuing Him still within his Majesty's own Dominions, and so to wast him to Silly, or Fersey, and from thence conclude what was to be done farther. They presented likewise their humble opinion to him, that in case he should be engaged in a Personal Treaty at London (which they conceiv'd the Rebels would never admit, without such Acts sirst obtain'd from his Majesty, as might invalidate His Power, and confirm Theirs) how inconvenient it might be, without the Privity of those Counsellors, whom he was then to trust, to Transport the Prince, except in danger of Surprisal, before the issue of that Treaty might be discern'd: Assuring his Majesty, "that nothing should put his Highness's Person into the hands of the Parsiliament, but his Majesty's own Commands; which they should not resist in his own Dominions, nor, they conceiv'd,

"any body elfe, if he were out of them.

THE appearance at Tavifock answerd the expectation; The Lord there being full two thousand four hundred of the Train'd-Wentbands, very chearful, and ready to march; at Okington were Worth's eight hundred old Soldiers, under Major General Molesworth; at Ash Burthe Foot with the Lord Wentworth were given out to be eight ton. hundred, with the Lord Goring's Guards which were in Dartmouth; and to be drawn thence, upon the advance to the Army: from Barnstable, the Governour had promised to fend five hundred Men; and out of Exeter, at the leaft, a thousand five hundred Men were promised: all which, with his Highness's Guards, might well be depended upon for fix thousand Foot. The Horse was very little fewer than five thousand; whereof his Highness's Guards made near seven hundred; so that, if all these could have been brought to Fight, the day feem'd not desperate. The Foot were appointed to have march'd the morrow, when the News came, "that the Enemy was advanced, and had beaten up the Lord Wentworth's Quarters in two feveral places, and shortly after the News, the Lord Wentworth himself came in, in great disorder, not inform'd of the particular of his loss, but conceiv'd it to be greater than in truth it was, though many Men, and more Horses, were taken in both places. The Prince was very delirous to puriue the former resolution, and to have advanced with the whole Body to Totness; but the Lord Wentworth did not only alledge, "that probably the Enemy "was possessed by that time of Totness, but that he had in "truth no hope to rally his Horse together, in any Numbers, "till they might be allow'd three or four days rest. Whereas all that Rout had been occasion'd by small Parties of the Enemy, who, at day time, came into their Quarters, and found no Guards, but all the Horse in the Stables; and their whole Body

Body moved not in two or three days after; encouraged, it was thought, by the great diforder they found those Troops to be in. Matters standing thus, and it being absolutely necessary, by reason of this disorderly retreat of the Horse, to draw off the Blockade from Plymouth, Tavistock was no longer thought a place for the Prince's Residence; his Highness by the Advice of a Council of War remov'd to Launceston; whither all the Foot were drawn, and the Horse appointed to keep the Devon-shire side of the River; and from thence he hoped he should be speedily able to advance towards Exeter.

THE King had staid at Hereford, as hath been faid, in great perplexity, and irrefolution; not knowing which way to take, but most inclined to go to Worceffer; till he was affured, " that the whole firength of the Parliament in the North was gather'd together under the Command of Points; and that he was already come between Hereford and Worceffer, "with a Body of above three thousand Horse and Dragoons; "with which he was appointed always to attend the King's "motion: fo that it would be very hard for his Majesty to get to Worcester, whither his purpose of going was, upon the new resolution he had taken again to march into Scotland to joyn with Mountrole, who was yet understood to be prosperous. This being the only delign, it was not thought reafonable "to profecute that murch by Worcefter, and thereby "to run the hazard of an Engagement with Points; but rather "to take a more secure passage through North Wales to Cheften; "and thence, through Lancashire, and Cumberland, to find a "way into Scotland, unobstructed by any Enemy that could "oppose them. This Counsel pleased; and within four days, though through very unpleasant ways, the King came within half a day's Journey of chefter; which he found in more danger than he suspected; for within three days before, the linemy, out of their Neighbour Garrisons, had surprised both the Out-works, and Suburbs of Chefter; and had made some attempt upon the City, to the great Terror, and Consternation of those within; who had no apprehension of such a surprise. So that this unexpected coming of his Majesty, look'd like a defignation of Providence for the preservation of so important a place: and the Beliegers were no less amazed, looking upon themselves as lost, and the King's Troops believ'd them to be in their power.

SIR Marmaduke Langdale was sent with most of the Horse over Holt-Bridge, that he might be on the East side of the River Dee; and the King, with his Guards, the Lord Gerrard, and the rest of the Horse, march'd directly into Cheffer, with a resolution, "that, early the day following, S. Marma"duke Langdale should have fallen upon the back of the

ha y "Enemy, when all the force of the Town should have Sallied Cout, and fo inclosed them. But Sr Marmaduke Langdale, being that Night drawn on a Heath two Miles from chefter, had intercepted a Letter from Pointz (who had march'd a much thorter way, after he was inform'd which way the King was bound) to the Commander that was before Chefter, telling him, "that he was come to their refcue, and defiring to have "fome Foot fent to him, to affilt him against the King's "Horse: and the next Morning he appear'd, and was Charg'd by Sr Marmaduke Langdale, and forced to retire with los; but kept still at such a distance, that the Foot from before Chefter might come to him. The Beliegers begun to draw out of the Suburbs in fuch haft, that it was believ'd in Chefter, they were upon their Flight; and so most of the Horse and Foot in the Town, had order to puriue them. But the others halt was to joyn with Pointz; which they quickly did; and then they Charg'd Se Marmaduke Langdale; who, being overpowerd, was Routed, and put to Flight; and purfued by Pointz even to the Walls of Cheffer. There the Earl of Lichfield with the King's Guards, and the Lord Gerrard with the relt of the Horse, were drawn up, and Charg'd Points, and forced him to retire. But the diforder of those Horse which first fled, had so filled the narrow ways, which were unfit for Horse to Fight in, that at last the Enemies Musqueteers compell'd the King's Horie to turn, and to Rout one another, and to overbear their own Officers, who would have restrain'd them. Here fell many Gentlemen, and Officers of Name, with the brave Earl of Lichfield; who was the third Brother of that Illustrious Family, that Sacrificed their Lives in this Quarrel. He was a very faultless young Man, of a most gentle, courteous, and affable Nature, and of a Spirit and Courage invincible; whose loss all Men exceedingly lamented, and the King bore it with extraordinary grief. There were many Persons of Quality taken Prisoners, amongst whom St Philip Musgrave, a Gentleman of a noble Extraction, and ample Fortune in Cumberland and Westmoreland; who liv'd to engage himself again in the same Service, and with the same Affection, and, after very great Sufferings, to fee the King Restored. This Defeat broke all the Body of Horse, which had attended the King from the Battle of Nafeby, and which now fled over all the Country to fave themselves; and were as much dispersed, as the greatest Rout could produce.

The defign of marching Northward, was now at an end; and it was well it was so; for about this very time Mountrose was Defeated by David Lesley; so that if the King had advanced farther, as he resolved to have done, the very next day after he came to chester, he could never have been able to have retreated. He staid in Chefter only one Night after this blow, but return'd, by the fame way by which he had come, to Denbigh-Castle in North Wales, being attended only with five hundred Horse; and there he staid three days to refresh himself, and to rally such of his Troops as had stopp'd within any distance. So that, in a short time, he had in view four and twenty hundred Horfe; but whither to go with them was still the difficult question. Some proposed "the life of An-"glesey, as a place of Safety, and an Island Fruitful enough "to support his Forces; which would defend it felf against "any Winter attempt, and from whence he might be eafily "Transported into Ireland or Scotland. They who objected against this, as very many objections might well be made, proposed "that his Majesty might Commodiously make his "Winter Quarters at Worcester, and by Quartering his Troops "upon the Severn, between Bridgenorth and Worcester, Itand "there upon his Guard; and by the access of some other "Forces, might be able to Fight with Pointz; who, by this time, that he might both be able the more to ilreighten chefer, and to watch the King's motion, had drawn his Troops over the River Dee into Denbigh-shire; so that he was now nearer the King, and made the march last proposed, much the more difficult; but there was so little choice, that it was profecuted, and with good Success; and there being another Bridge to pass the Dee some Miles further, and through as ill ways as any those Countries have, his Majesty went over without any opposition; and had, by this means, left Pointz a full day's fourney behind. Here Prince Maurice waited on his Majesty with eight hundred Horse, part whereof was of Prince Rupert's Regiment that came out of Briftel. And now being thus strengthen'd, they less apprehended the Enemy; yet continued their march without resting, till, by Fording the Severn, they came to Bridgenorth, the place delign'd. Now every body expected, that they should forthwith go to Worcefter, and take up their Winter Quarters; but upon the News of the Surrender of Berkley-Castle in Glocester-shire, and of the Devixes in Wilt-shire, two strong Garrisons of the King's, it was urged, "that Worcester would not be a good place for "the King's Winter Residence, and Newark was proposed as "a place of more fecurity. This advice was the more like to be embraced, because it was vehemently pursued upon a private, and particular Interest.

THOUGH Prince Rupers had submitted to the King's pleafure, in resigning his Commission, yet he resolv'd not to make use of his Pass, and to quit the Kingdom, till he might first see his Majesty, and give an account of the Reasons which oblig'd him to deliver up Bristel, and was ready to begin his Journey towards him, affoon as he could be inform'd where the King intended to reft. The Lord Digby, who had then the chief influence upon his Majesty's Councils, and was generally believ'd to be the fole cause of revoking the Prince's Commission, and of the Order sent to him to leave the Kingdom, without being heard what He could fay for himself, found that the odium of all this proceeding fell upon blim; and therefore, to prevent the breaking of that Cloud upon Him, which threaten'd his Ruin (for he had not only the indignation of Prince Rupert, and all his Party to contend with, but the extreme Malice of the Lord Gerrard; who used to hate heartily upon a fuddain accident, without knowing why; over and above this, as Prince Rupert would have an easy Journey to Worcester, so Prince Maurice was Governour there, who had a very tender fense of the severity his Brother had undergone, and was ready to revenge it; whereas it the King went to Newark, the Journey from Oxford thither would be much more difficult, and Prince Meurice would be without any Authority there) these Reasons were Motives enough to the Lord Digby, to be very follicatous to divert the King from Worcefter, and to incline him to Newark ; and his Credit was to great, that against the opinion of every other Man, the King resolved to take that course; so having stay'd only one day at Bridgenorth, and from thence lent or Thomas Glembam to receive the Government of Oxford he made halt to Liebfield; and then passed with that speed to Newark, Thence to that he was there affoon as the Governour had notice of his Newark. purpose. In this manner, in the greatest perplexity of his own Affairs, was his Majefty compell'd to condescend to the particular, and private Passions of other Men.

WHEN the King came to Newark, he betook himfelf to The condithe regulating the disorders of that Garrison ; which, by their tion of the great Luxury and Excesses, in a time of so general Calamity, Newark at had given just scandal to the Commissioners, and to all the this time. Country. The Garrison consisted of about two thousand Horse and Foot; and to those there were about four and twenty Colonels and General Officers, who had all liberal Affignments out of the Contributions, according to their Qualities; so that though that small County paid more Contribution than any other of that bigness in England, there was very little left to pay the Common Soldiers, or to provide for any other Expences. This made so great a noise, that the King found it absolutely necessary to reform it; and reduced some of the Officers entirely, and lessen'd the Pay of others; which added to the number of the Discontented; which was very much too numerous before. Now reports were spread abroad with great confidence, and the advertisement sent from feveral places, though no Author named "that Mountrofe "after his Defeat, by an access of those Troops which were "then absent, had Fought again with David Lesley; and ro-"tally Defeated him; and that he was march'd towards the Borders with a strong Army. This News, how groundless foever, was to very good that it was easily believ'd, and believ'd to that degree, that the King himself declared a Resolution, the third time, to advance, and joyn with Mountraje; and the Lord Digby (who knew that Prince Rupers was already upon his way from Oxford, and that Prince Maurice had met him at Banbary) prevailed to far, that the King refolved, without delay, or expecting any Confirmation of the Report, "to move Northward to meet the News, and, if it "fell not out to his Wish, the would return to Newerk. In this Resolution, after a Weeks stay at Newark, he merch'd to Tuxford; and the next day to Wellberk, having, in his way, met with the same general Reports of Mount roje's Victories; which were interpreted as to many Confirmations; and therefore, though the King affembled his Council to confult vat Wellbeck, he declar'd so that he would mot have it Debated, whether he should advance or regine, but concerning the "manner of his advancing; fince he was relety'd not to re-"tire; which he was fure would be attended with more mil-" chief than could accompany his advancing one year by she obeT His Declaration, how disagreeable foever it was to the fense of much the Major part, left very little to be consulted upon; for fince they must advance, it was easily agreed "that wthey should march the next day to Retherent; and that the "Troops should be drawn to a Rendezvous, the next Morn-"ing, at fuch an Hour; and to the Officers vwere urifing to give Orders out for the executioning what was Refold'd; when, in the instant, one knock det the door; who, being call'd in, was found to be the Trumpeter formerly fent from Cardiff to the seeifh Army, with at Letter to the Earl of Liwen, General thereof; who had taken him with him as far as Berwick before he would fuffer him to be discharg d. The King ask'd him, " what he had heard of the Marquis of Mountroje? He answer'd, "that the last News he had heard of him, was, that he was about Sterling, retiring farther North; and that David Lefley was in Lothian, on this fide Edenborough; and that the Scotish Army lay between North Allerton and New-"Castle. This so unexpected Relation; dashed the former purpose; and the Lord Digby himself declard, "that it was by no means fit for his Majesty to advance; but to retire refently to Newark; which was, by every body, agreed to; and the Rendezvous of the Army for the next Morning to continue. declar'd, "that though it was not judged fit for Himself to "advance Northward, yet he thought it very necessary, that "Sr Marmaduke Langdale should, with the Horse under his "Command, march that way; and endeavour to joyn with "Mauntrose. And, having said so, his Majesty look d upon Sr Marmaduke; who very chearfully submitted to his Majesty's pleasure; and said, "he had only one Suit to make to his Ma"jesty; which was that the Lord Digby might Command in "Chief, and He under him. All who were present, stood amaz'd at what was now said; of which, no word had passed in Council; but when the Lord Digby as frankly accepted of the Command, they concluded, that it had been concerted before between the king and the other Two.

No Man contradicted any thing that had been proposed; and so immediately, upon the place; a short Commission was prepared, and Sign d by the King, to constitute the Lord Digby Lieutenant General of all the Forces raised, or to be raised for the King on the other side of Trent; and with this Commission he immediately departed from the King, taking with him from the Rendezyous all the Northern Horse, with Sr Marmaduke Langdale, and Sr Richard Hutton, High Sherist of York-shire, together with the Earls of Carnewarth, and Niddisdale, and several other Scotish Gentlemen: He march'd in the head of sisteen hundred Horse; and so in a moment became a General, as well as a Secretary of State; and march'd presently to Doncasterion BEGAUSE this Expedition was in a thort time at an end. it will not be amiss to fmish the relation in this place; there being no occasion to resume it hereafter. The Lord Digby was inform'd at his being at Doncaster, "that there was, in a "Town two or three Miles diffant, and little out of the way "of the next day's march, one thousand Foot newly rais d for "the Parliament; which he refolv'd, the next Morning to fall upon; and did it to well, that they all threw down their Armes, and dispersed; whereupon he prosecuted his march to a Town call'd Sherborne, where he stay'd to refresh his Troops; and whilst he stay d there, he had notice of the advance of some Troops of Horse towards him, under the Command of Colonel copley: Digby presently Sounded to Horse, and having gotten some few Troops ready, march'd with them out of the Town; and finding copley standing upon a convenient ground, he would not stay for his other Companies, but immediately Charg'd them with that Courage, that he routed most of their Bodies; which, after a short resistance, Fled, and were purfued by his Horse through Sherborne; where the other Troops were refreshing themselves; who discerning the Flight of Horse, in great Consternation, concluded, that they bobuis were their own Fellows, who had been Routed by the Enemy; and fo with equal confusion they mounted their Horses, and Fled as fast as the other, such ways, as they severally Sherborne conceived to be most for their safety. By this means, a Troop that remain'd upon the Field unbroken, fell upon the Lord Digby, and those Officers, and Gentlemen, who remain'd about him; who were compell'd to make their retreat to Skipton; which they did with the loss of Sr Richard Hutton (a gallant and worthy Gentleman, and the Son and Heir of a very Venerable Judge, a Man famous in his Generation) and two or three other Persons; and with the loss of the Lord Digby's Baggage; in which was his Cabinet of Papers; which, being published by the Parliament, administer d afterwards to much occasion of discourse.

Ar Skipton, most of the scatter'd Troops came together again, with which he march'd, without any other mifadventures, through Cumberland and Westmoreland, as far as Dumfreeze in Scotland; and then, neither receiving directions Which way to march, not where Mountrafe was, and less knowing how to retire without falling into the hands of the Storiffs Army upon the Borders; in the highest despair, that Lord, Sr Marmaduke Langdale, the two Earls, and most of the other Officers, Embarked themselves for the He of Man; and, thortly after, for Ireland, where we shall leave them, all the Troops being left by them, to third for themselves. Thus those fifteen hundred Horse which march'd Northward, within very few days were brought to nothing; and the Generalflip of the Lord Digbt, to an end. But if it had not been for that extraordinary accident of the flying of his own Troops, because the Enemy fled (as the greatest misfortunes which befel that Noble Person, throughout the whole course of his Life, ufually fell out in a conjuncture when he had near attain'd to what he could wish) he had without doubt been Master of Tork, and of the whole North; the Parliament having no other Forces in all those parts, their Garrisons excepted, than those Foot which he first defeated, and those Horse which he had fo near broken. The temper, and composition of his Mind was fo admirable, that he was always more pleased and delighted that he had advanced to far, which he imputed to his own Virtue and Conduct, than broken or dejected that his Success was not answerable, which he still charg'd upon second Causes, for which he thought himself not accountable.

WHEN the Lord Digby and Sr Marmaduke Langdale left the King, his Majesty march'd back to Newark with eight hundred Horse of his own Guards, and the Troops belonging to the Lord Gerrard; and quickly heard of the misfortune that befel the Northern Adventurers; upon which He concluded that it would not be fafe for him to stay longer in the place where he was, for by this time Pointz was come with all his Troops to Nottingham, and Rossier with all the Force of Lincoln-shire to Grantham; and all the power his Majesty had, was not in any degree strong enough to oppose either of them; so that he was only to watch an opportunity by the Darkness of the Nights, and good Guides, to steal from thence to Worcester, or Oxford; in either of which he could only expect a little more time, and leisure to consider what was next to be done.

Bur before his Majesty can leave Newark, he must under-An account go a new kind of Mortification from his Friends, much sharper of the Difthan any he had undergone from his Enemies; which, with content of out doubt, he suffered with much more grief, and perplexity Chief Comof mind. Prince Rupert was now come to Belvoir-Caltle manders awith his Brother Prince Maurice, and about one hundred and gainst the twenty Officers who attended him; with which he had fu-King at stained a charge from Rossiter, and broke through without any confiderable loss. When the King heard of his being so near, he writ a Letter to him, by which "he required him to "Itay at Belvoir till further Order; and reprehended him "for not having given obedience to his former Commands. Notwithstanding this Command, he came the next day to Newark, and was met by the Lord Gerrard, and St Richard Willis, Governour of the Town, with one hundred Horse, two miles in his way. About an hour after, with this Train. he came to the Court; and found the King in the presence; and, without Ccremony, told his Majesty, that he was "come to render an account of the loss of Bristol, and to clear "himself from those imputations which had been cast upon "him. The King faid very little to him; but, meat being brought up, went to Supper; and, during that time, asked some Questions of Prince Maurice, without saying any thing to the other. After he had Supped, he retired to his Chamber, without admitting any farther discourse; and the Prince return'd to the Governour's House, where he was well treated and lodged. The King, how displeased soever, thought it necessary to hear what Prince Rupert would say, that he might with the more ease provide for his own escape from thence; which it was high time to make. So he appointed the next day to hear his defence, which the Prince made with many protestations of "his innocence, and how impossible it was "long to defend the Fort, after the Line was entred. His Majesty did not suspect his Nephew to have any Malicious defign against his Service, and had no mind to aggravate any circumstances which had accompanied that Action; and therefore, after a day or two's debate, cauled a fhort Declaration to be drawn up, by which Prince Rupers was absolved and cleared from any Disloyalty, or Treason in the rendring of Bristol, but not of Indiscretion. So that matter was settled; upon which the King expected the Prince should have departed, as himself resolved to prosecute the means for his own escape, without communicating it to him.

THE change of the polture of the Enemy, and Pointz's coming to the North fide of Trent, made his Majesty resolve to begin his march on the Sunday Night, being the twentieth of October; which he imparted to none but two or three of the nearest trust. But the differences were grown so high between the Governour and the Commissioners (who were all the principal Gentlemen of the Country, and Who had with Courage and Fidelity adher'd to the King from the beginning, and whose interest alone had preserv'd that place) and had been fo much increased by the mutual Contests which had been between them in the presence of the King, that there was no possibility of reconciling them, and very little of preserving the Garrison, but by the removal of the Governour; which was so evident to the King, that he resolv'd on that expedient; and, on the Sunday Morning, fent for St Richard Willis into his Bed-Chamber; and after many gracious expressions of "the Satisfaction he had received in his Service, and of "the great abilities he had to ferve him, he told him, "his cown design to be gone that Night; and that he resolved to "take him with him, and to make him Captain of his Horse "Guards, in the place of the Earl of Lichfield, who had been "Iately kill'd before chefter (which was a Command fit for any Subject) "and that he would leave the Lord Bellasis "Governour of Newark, who being allied to most of the "Gentlemen of the adjacent Counties, and having a good Estate there, would be more acceptable to them. His Majesty condescended so far, as to tell him, othat he did not "hereby give a judgement on the Commissioners side, who he declared had been to blame in many particulars; and that the himself could not have an ampler vindication, than by the honour and trust he now conferred upon him; but he found it would be much easier to remove Him, than to reform the Commissioners; who, being many, could not be any other way united in his Service.

St Richard Willis appear'd very much troubled; and excufed the not taking the other command, "as a place of too great "Flonour, and that his Fortune could not maintain him in "that employment; he faid, that his Enemies would triumph "at his removal, and he should be looked upon as cast out, "and disgraced. The King replied, "that he would take "care, and provide for his Support; and that a man could 8 on not be looked upon as difgraced, who was placed fo near his Person; which, he told him, he would find to be true, "when he had thought a little of it. So his Majesty went out of his Chamber, and prefently to the Church. When he return'd from thence, he fat down to dinner; the Lords, and other of his Servants, retiring likewife to their Lodgings. Before the King had din'd, Sr Riebard Willis, with both the Princes, the Lord Gerrard, and about twenty Officers of the Garrison, entred into the presence Chamber: Willis addressed himself to the King, and told him, "that what his Majesty "had faid to him in private, was now the publick Talk of the "Town, and very much to his Dilhonour: Prince Rupers faid, "that Sr Richard Willis was to be remov'd from his Go-"vernment, for no Fault that he had committed, but for be-"ing His Friend: the Lord Gerrard added, "that it was the "Plot of the Lord Digby, who was a Traytor, and he would "prove him to be fo. The King was so surprised with this manner of behaviour, that he role in some disorder from the Table, and would have gone into his Bed-Chamber; calling So Richard Willis to follow him; who answer'd aloud, "that "he had receiv'd a Publick injury, and therefore that he ex-"pected a Publick fatisfaction. This, with what had passed before, to provoked his Majesty, that, with greater indignation than he was ever feen possessed with, he commanded them "to depart from his Presence, and to come no more into it; and this with fuch, circumstances in his looks and gesture, as well as words, that They appear d no less confounded; and departed the Room, asham'd of what they had done; yet as foon as they came to the Governour's House, they Sounded to Horse, intending to be presently gone.

THE noise of this unheard of infolence, quickly brought the Lords who were absent, and all the Gentlemen in the Town, to the King, with expressions full of Duty, and a very tender fense of the usage he had endured of There is no doubt, he could have proceeded in what manner he would as gainst the Offenders But his Majesty thought it best on many confiderations, to leave them to themselves, and to be punished by their own reflections; and prefently declared the Lord Bellasis to be Governour; who immediately betook himself to his Charge, and placed the Guarda in such a manndras he thought reasonable. In the Afternoon, a Petition and Remonstrance was brought to the King, fign'd by the two Princes, and about four and twenty Officers; in which they defired, "that So Richard Willis might receive a Trial by a "Court of War; and if they found him faulty, then to be "dismissed from his Charge; and that, if this might not be "granted, they defined Passes for themselves, and as many "Horte

"Horse as desir'd to go with them. Withal, they said, "they hoped, that his Majesty would not look upon this Action of theirs as a Mutiny. To the last, the King said, "he would not now Christen it; but it look'd very like one: As for the Court of War, he would not make that a judge of His Actions; but for the Passes, they should be immediately prepared for as many as desired to have them. The next Morning the Passes were sent to them; and in the Asternoon they left the Town; being in all about two hundred Horse; and went to Wyverton, a small Garrison depending upon Newark; where they stayed some days; and from thence went to Belvoir-Castle; from whence they sent one of their Number to the Parliament, "to desire leave, and Passes, to " go beyond the Seas."

BESIDE's the exceeding trouble and vexation that this Action of his Nephews, towards whom he had always expressed such tenderness and indulgence, gave the King, it had well nigh broke the delign he had for his prefent escape; which was not possible to be executed in that time; and Pointz and Rossier drew every day nearer, believing they had fo encompassed him round, that it was not possible for him to get out of their hands. They had now Belieged Sherford-House, a Garrison belonging to Newark, and kept strong Guards between them and Belvoir, and stronger towards Lichfield; which was the way they most suspected his Majesty would incline to take; fo that the truth is, nothing but Providence could conduct him out of that Labyrinth; but the King gave not himself over. He had fixed now his Resolution for Oxford, and fent a trufty Messenger thither with directions, that the Horse of that Garrison should be ready, upon a day he appointed, between Banbury and Daventry. Then, upon Monday, the third of November, early in the Morning, he fent a Gentleman to Belver Caftle, to be inform'd of the true State of the Rebels Quarters, and to advertise S. Gervas Lucas, the Governour of that Garrison, of his Majelty's delign to march thither that Night, with order that his Troops and Guides should be ready at such an hour; but with an express charge, "that he should not acquaint the "Princes, or any of their Company, with it. That Gentleman being return'd with very particular information, the refolution was taken "to march that very night, but not publish'd till an hour after the shutting the Ports. Then order was given, "that all should be ready in the Market place, at "ten of the Clock; and by that time the Horse were all there, and were in number between four and five hundred, of the Guards and of other loofe Regiments; they were all there put in order; and every Man was placed in some Troop;

which done, about eleven of the Clock, they began to march the King himself in the head of his own Troop, march'd in The King the middle of the whole Body. By three of the Clock in the retreats to-Morning, they were at Belvoir; without the least interrup ford: tion or alarm given. There Sr Gervas Lucas, and his Troop, with good Guides were ready; and attended his Majesty till the break of day; by which time he was past those Quarters he most apprehended; but he wasftill to march between their Garrisons; and therefore made no delay, but march'd all that day; passing near Burleigh upon the Hill, a Garrison of the Enemy, from whence fome Horse waited upon the Rear, and took and kill'd some Men, who either negligently staid behind, or whose Horses were tired. Towards the Evening the King was fo very weary, that he was even compell'd to rest and sleep for the space of four hours, in a Village within eight miles of Northampton. At ten of the Clock that Night, they began to march again; and were, before Day, the next Morning past Daventry; and before Noon, came to Banbury; And arrives where the Oxford Horse were ready, and waited upon his Ma-there. jesty, and conducted him safe to Oxford that Day; so he finilh'd the most tedious and grievous march that ever King was exercised in, having been almost in perpetual motion from the loss of the Battle of Nafeby to this hour, with such a variety of difmal accidents as must have broken the Spirits of any Man who had not been truly magnanimous. At Oxford, the King found himself at rest, and ease to revolve, and resect upon what was past, and to advise and consult of what was to be done, with Persons of entire devotion to him, and of steady Judgements; and presently after his coming thither, he writ that Letter of the leventh of November; and, shortly after, the other of the seventh of December; both which are mention'd before, and fet down at large.

THE Prince of Wales did not enjoy so much rest and ease The Kine's in His Quarters; for, upon the hurry of the Retreat of the Affairs Horse, which is mention'd before, and which indeed was full the west of confusion, very many of the Train'd-bands of Cornwal broke about this loofe, and run to their Houses, pretending "they fear'd that "the Horse would go into that Country, and plunder them; for which fear they had the greater pretence, because, upon the Retreat, many Regiments had Orders from the Lord Wentworth to Quarter in Cornwal; of which his Highness was no fooner advertised, than he sent his Orders politive, "that "no one Regiment of Horse should be there, but that they "hould be all Quarter'd on the Devon fide. Upon that, they were dispersed about the County, for the space of thirty miles breadth, as if no Enemy had been within two days march of them. There were now drawn together, and to be engaged

Vol. II. Part 2. A a a together

together in one Action against the Enemy, all the Horse and Foot of the Lord Goring; the Command whereof, the Lord Wentworth challenged to himself by deputation; the Horse and Foot of Sr Richard Greenvil; and the Horse and Foot of General Digby, neither of which acknowledged a superiority in the other, besides the Guards; which no body pretended to Command but the Lord Capel. When the Prince remov'd from Tavistock, the raising the Blockade from Plymouth was absolutely necessary, and it was concluded, as hath been faid, at a Council of War, "that it would be fit for his Highness "to remove to Launceston; whither the Train'd-bands, and "the rest of the Foot should likewise come, and the Horse "march on the Deven-shire side, and Quarter most conve-" niently in that County. The care of the Retreat, and bringing the Provisions from Tavistock, was committed to St Richard Greenvil; which was perform'd by him to negligently, that befides the diforders he fuffer'd in Taviffeck, by the Soldiers, a great part of the Magazine of Victuals, and three or four hundred pair of Shoes, were left there; and so lost. The day after the Prince came to Launceston, S. Richard Greenvil writ a Letter to him, wherein he represented " the impossi-"bility of keeping that Army together, or fighting with it in "the condition it was then in; told him, "that he had, the "night before, fent directions to Major General Harris (who Commanded the Foot that came from about Plymouth) "to "guard fuch a Bridge; but that he return'd him word, that "he would receive Orders from none but General Digby; "that General Digby faid, that he would receive Orders from "none but his Highness; that a Party of the Lord Wentworth's "Horse had the same Night come into his Quarters, where "his Troop of Guards, and his Firelocks were; that neither "fubmitting to the Command of the other, they had fallen "foul, and two or three Men had been kill'd; that they con-"tinued still in the same place, drawn up one against ancother; that it was absolutely necessary, his Highness should "constitute one Superior Officer, from whom all those inde-"pendent Officers might receive Orders; without which, it "would not be possible for that Army to be kept together, "or do Service; that for His own part, he knew his Seve-"rity and Discipline had render'd him so odious to the Lord "Goring's Horse, that they would sooner choose to serve the "Enemy, than receive Orders from Him; therefore he de-"fired his Highness to constitute the Earl of Brentford, or "the Lord Hopton, to Command in Chief, and then he hoped, " fome good might be done against the Enemy. THE mischief was more visible by much than a remedy;

it was evident some Action must be with the Enemy within few days, and what inconvenience would flow from any alteration, at fuch a conjuncture of time, was not hard to guels, when both Officer and Soldier were defirous to take any occation, and to find any excuse to lay down their Armes; and it was plain, though there were very few who could do good, there were enough that could do hurt; befides, whoever was fit to undertake so great a trust and charge, would be very hardly entreated to take upon him the Command of a diffolute, undisciplin'd, wicked, beaten Army, upon which he must engage his Honour, and the hope of what was left, without having time to inform, or instruct them. That which made the resolution necessary, was, that though there was little hope of doing good by any alteration in Command, there was evident and demonstrable ruin attended No alteration; and they who were trulted might be accountable to the World, for not advising the Prince to do that, which, how hopeless soever, only remain'd to be done.

- THEREUPON, on the fifteenth of Fanuary, his Highness The Lord made an Order, "that the Lord Hopton should take the Charge Hopton "of the whole Army upon him; and that the Lord Went-made Gene-worth should Command all the Horse, and Sr Richard Green-remains of "vil the Foot. It was a heavy imposition, I confess, upon the western the Lord Hopton (to the which nothing but the most abstract-Army. Lord ed Duty and Obedience could have Submitted) to take charge Wentof those Horse whom only their Friends fear'd, and their Ene-Command mies laughed at; being only terrible in Plunder, and reso-the Hotse, lute in Running away. Of all the Train'd-bands of Cornwal, Greenvil there were not three hundred left; and those, by some infu-the Foot. fions from Greenvil and others, not so devoted to him as might have been expected. The rest of the Foot (besides those who belonged to the Lord Goring, which were two Regiments of about four hundred) were the three Regiments of about fix hundred; which belong'd to St Richard Greenvil, and the Officers of them entirely His Creatures; and those belonging to General Digby, which were not above five hundred; To these were added (and were indeed the only Men, but a small Troop of his own of Horse and some Foot, upon whose affection, courage, and duty he could rely; except some particular Gentlemen, who could only undertake for themselves) about two hundred and fifty Foot, and eight hundred Horse of the Guards; who were Commanded by the Lord capel, and entirely to receive Orders from his Lordship.

THE Lord Hopton very generously told the Prince, "that "it was a cultom now, when Men were not willing to lub-" mit to what they were enjoyn'd, to fay, that it was against "their Honour; that their Honour would not fuffer them to do this or that; for His part, he could not obey his High-

"ness at this time, without resolving to lose his Honour; "which he knew he must, but since his Highness thought it "necessary to Command him, he was ready to obey him with the loss of his Honour. Since the making of this Order was concluded an Act of absolute necessary, and the Lord Hopton had so worthily Submitted to it, it was positively resolved by his Highness, "that it should be dutifully Submitted to by all "other Men; or that the Resulers should be exemplarily punished. There was not the least suspicion that Sr Richard Greenvil would not willingly have Submitted to it, but it was believed that the Lord Wentworth, who had carried himself so high, and more insolently since his disorderly retreat than before, would have resused; which if he had done, it was resolved by the Prince presently to have committed him, and to have desired the Lord Capel to have taken the charge of the Horse.

HIS Highness sent Sr Richard Greenvil a Letter of thanks, " for the advice which he had given; and which, he faid, he "had follow'd, as by the inclosed Order he might perceive; "by which his Highness had committed the care and charge of the whole Army to the Lord Hopton, appointing that the "Lord Wentworth should Command all the Horse, and Sr "Richard Greenvil all the Foot, and both to receive Orders "from the Lord Hopton: no Man imagining it possible that, belides that he had given the advice, he could have refused that Charge, by which he was to have a greater Command than ever he had before, and was to be commanded by none but by whom he had often been formerly commanded. But the next day after he receiv'd that Letter and Order, contrary to all expectation, he writ to his Highness " to desire to be "excused, in respect of his indisposition of health; expres-"fing, that he could do him better fervice in getting up the "Soldiers who stragled in the Country, and in suppressing "Malignants; and at the same time, writ to the Lord Colepepper, " that he could not confent to be commanded by the Lord Hopton. It plainly appear'd now, that his drift was to stay behind, and Command Cornwal; with which, considering the premises, the Prince thought he had no reason to trust him. He fent for him therefore, and told him "the ex-"treme ill consequence that would attend the publick Service, "if he should Then, and in such a manner, quit the Charge "his Highness had committed to him; that more should not "be expected from him than was agreeable to his health; and "that if he took the Command upon him, he should take what Adjurants he pleas'd to affiff him. But notwithstanding all that the Prince could fay to him, or fuch of his Friends who thought they had Interest in him, he continued obstinate; and politively refused to take the Charge, or to receive Orders from the Lord Hopton.

What should the Prince have done? for besides the ill consequence of suffering himself to be in that manner contemned, at a time when that Army was so indisposed, it was very evident, if Greenvil were at liberty, and the Army once march'd out of Cornwal, he would have put himself in the head of all the discontented Party, and at least endeavour'd to have hindred their retreat back into Cornwal, upon what occasion soever; and for the present that he would under-hand have kept many from marching with the Army, upon the fenseless pretence of defending their own Country. So that, SrR. Greenupon full consideration, his Highness thought fit to commit vil refusing him to Prison to the Governour of Launceston; and within mand, the two or three days after, sent him to the Mount; where he Prince comremain'd till the Enemy was possessed of the County; when mits him to his Highness, that he might by no means fall into their hands, Prison.

gave him leave to Transport himself beyond the Sea.

THE Lord Wentworth, though he feem'd much surprised with the Order when he heard it read at the Board, and defird "time to confider of it till the next day, that he might "confer with his Officers; yet, when the Prince told him, "that he would not refer his Acts to be scanned by the Of-"ficers; but that he should give his positive Answer, whether "he would submit to it, or no; and then his Highness knew "what he had to do; he only defir'd "to consider till the "Afternoon; when he fubmitted; and went that Night out of Town to his Quarters; of which most Men were not glad, but rather wish'd (fince they knew he would never obey chearfully) that he would have put the Prince to have made further alterations; which yet would have been accompanied with hazard enough. By this time the Intelligence was certain of the loss of Dartmouth, which added neither Courage, nor Numbers to our Men; and the importunity was such from Exeter for present relief, that there seem'd even a necessity of attempting somewhat towards it, upon how great disadvantage soever; and therefore the Lord Hopton resolv'd to march by the way of Chimley; that fo, being between the Enemy and Barnstable, he might borrow as many Men out of the Garrison, as could be spared; and by strong Parties at least to attempt upon their Quarters. But it was likewise resolv'd, that in respect of the smallness of the numbers, and the ge-"neral indisposition, to say no worse, both in Officer and Sol-"dier, it would not be fit for his Highness to venture his own "Person with the Army; but that he should retire to Tru-" ro, and relide there; against which there were objections enough in view, which were however weighed down by greater.

WHOEVER had observed the temper of the Gentry of A a a 3 that that County towards Sr Richard Greenvil, or the Clamour of the Common People against his Oppression, and Tyranny, would not have believ'd, that fuch a necessary proceeding against him, at that time, could have been any Unpopular Act; there being scarce a day, in which some Petition was not presented against him. As the Prince passed through Bodmin, he receiv'd Petitions from the Wives of many substantial, and honest Men; amongst the rest, of the Mayor of Listibles; who was very eminently well affected and useful to the King's Service; all whom Greenvil had committed to the Common Goal, for prefuming to Fish in that River; the Royalty of which he pretended belonged to him, by Virtue of the Sequestration, granted him by the King, of the Lord Reberts's Estate at Lanbetberick; whereas they who were committed, pretended a Title, and had always used the liberty of Fishing in those Waters, as Tenants to the Prince of his Highness's Mannor of Liftitbiel; there having been long Suits between the Lord Roberts and the Tenants of that Mannor, for that Royalty. And when his Highness came to Tavistock, he was again Pention'd by many Women for the liberty of their Husbands, whom Si Richard had committed to Prison, for refufing to grind at his Mill, " which, he faid, they were "bound by the Custom to do. So by his Martial Power he had Afferted whatever Civil Interest he thought fit to lay claim to; and never discharged any Man out of Prison, till he absolutely submitted to his Pleasure.

THERE were in the Goal at Launceston, at this time when himself was committed, at least thirty Persons, Constables and other Men, whom he had committed, and imposed Fines upon, forme of three, four, and five hundred pounds, upon pretence of Delinquency (of which he was in no case a proper Judge) for the payment whereof they were detain'd in Prison. Amongst the rest, was the Mayor of Scilves, one Hammond, who had then the reputation of an honest Man; and was certified to be such by Colonel Robinson the Governour, and by all the Neighbouring Gentlemen. After the late Infurrection there, which is spoken of before, he had given his Bond to St Richard Greenvil, of five hundred pound, to produce a young Man, who was then absent, and accused to be a favourer of that Mutiny, within so many days. The time expired before the Man could be found; but within three days after the expiration of the term, the Mayor sent the Fellow to Sr Richard Greenvil, That would not fatisfy; but he fent his Marshal for the Mayor himself, and required fifty pound of him for having forfeited his Bond, and upon his refusal forthwith to pay it, committed him to the Goal at Launceston. The Son of the Mayor presented a Petition to the

Prince,

Prince, at Trure, for his Father's liberty, fetting forth the matter of fact as it was, and annexing a very ample testimony of the good Affection of the Man. The Petition was referr'd to Sr Richard Greenvil, with direction, "that if the case were "in truth fuch, he should discharge him. Assoon as the Son brought this Petition to him, he put it in his Pocket; told him, "the Prince understood not the business; and committed the Son to Goal, and caused Irons to be put upon him for his prefumption. Upon a fecond Petition to the Prince, at Launceston, after the time that Sr Richard himself was committed, he directed the Lord Hopton, "upon examination " of the truth of it, to discharge the Man; of which, when St Richard heard, he sent to the Goaler "to forbid him, at this peril, to discharge Hammond; threatning him to "make him pay the Money; and, after that, caused an Action to be enter'd in the Town Court at Launce from upon the forfeiture of the Bond. Yet, notwithstanding all this, he was no fooner committed by the Prince, than even those who had complain'd of him as much as any, expressed great trouble; and many Officers of those Forces which he had Commanded, in a Tumultuous manner, Petition'd for his release; and others took great pains to have the indisposition of the People, and the ill accidents that follow'd, imputed to that proceeding against Sr Richard Greenvil; in which none were more forward, than fome of the Prince's own Household Servants; who were fo tender of Him, that they forgot their duty to their Malter.

I'T was Friday the fixth of February, before the Lord Hopton could move from Launceston, for want of Carriages for their Ammunition, and Provision of Victual. Neither had he then Carriages for above half their little Store, but rely'd upon the Commissioners to send the remainder after; and so went to Torrington; where he resolved to fasten, till his Provisions could be brought up; and he might receive certain intelligence of the Motion, and Condition of the Enemy. He had not continued there above four days, in which he had Barricadoed, and made some little Fastnesses about the Town, when Sr Thomas Fairfax advanced to Chimley, within eight Miles of Torrington, with fix thousand Foot, three thousand five hundred Horse, and five hundred Dragoons; of which To near advance of the Enemy (notwithstanding all the strict Orders for keeping of Guards; whereof one Guard was, or was appointed to be, within two Miles of Chimley) he had not known but by a Lieutenant, who was accidentally plundering in those parts, and fell amongst them. So negligent, and unfaithful, were both Officers and Soldiers in their duty.

The Lord Hopton's ton by Sr Thomas Fairfax.

THE Lord Hopton having this Intelligence of the Strength. and Neighbourhood of the Enemy, had his Election of two Forces routed things, either to retire into Corumal, or to abide them where arTorring he was; the first, besides the disheartning of his Men, seem'd rather a deferring, than a preventing of any mischief that could befal him; for he forefaw, if he brought that great Body of Horse into Cornwal, the few that remain'd of the Train'dbands, would immediately dissolve, and run to their Houses; and the remainder of Horse and Foot, in a short time, be deftroy'd without an Enemy. Therefore he rather chose, notwithstanding the great disadvantage of Number in Foot, to abide them in that place; where, if the Enemy should attempt him in so fast a Quarter, he might defend himself with more advantage, than he could in any other place. So he placed his Guards, and appointed all Men to their Posts, having drawn as many Horse (such as on the suddain he could get) into the Town, as he thought necessary; the rest being order'd to stand on a Common, at the East end of the Town. But the Enemy forced the Barricadoe in one place by the baseness of the Foot; with which the Horse in the Town more basely receiv'd such a Fright, that they could neither be made to Charge, nor Stand; but, in perfect confusion, run away; whose example all the Foot upon the Line, and at their other Posts, follow'd; leaving their General (who was hurt in the Face with a Pike, and his Horse kill'd under him') with two or three Gentlemen, to thift for themselves; one of the Officers publickly reporting, left the Soldiers should not make haft enough in running away, "that he faw their General run "through the Body with a Pike. The Lord Hopton recovering a fresh Horse, was compell'd (being thus deserted by his Men) to retire; which he did, to the Borders of cornwal; and stay'd at Stratton two or three days, till about a thousand or twelve hundred of his Foot came up to him. It was then in confultation, fince there was no likelyhood of making any stand against the Enemy with such Foot, and that it was vifible that Body of Horse could not long subsist in Cornwal, whether the Horse might not break through to Oxford; which, in respect of their great weariness, having stood two or three Days and Nights in the Field, and the Enemies strength being drawn up within two Miles of them, was concluded to be impossible. Besides (that there was at that time a consident assurance, by an Express (Sr D. Wyat) out of France, "of four or five thousand Foot to come from thence within three "Weeks, or a Month at farthest; those Letters, and the Mefsenger, averring, "that most of the Men were ready, when "He came away. THE Enemy advanced to Stratton, and so to Launceston;

where Mr Edgecomb, who had always pretended to be of the King's Party, with his Regiment of Train'd-bands, joyn'd with them; and the Lord Hopton retir'd to Bodmin; the Horfe, Officers and Soldiers, notwithstanding all the strict Orders, very negligently performing their duty; insomuch as the Lord Hopton protested, "that, from the time he undertook the "Charge, to the hour of their diffolving, scarce a Party of "Guard appear'd with half the Number appointed, or within "two hours of the time; and Goring's Brigade, having the Guard upon a Down near Bodmin, drew off without Orders, and without fending out a Scout; infomuch as the whole groß of the Rebels, were at day time march'd within three Miles, before the Foot in Bodmin had any notice. So that the Lord Hopton was instantly forced to draw off his Foot and Carriages Westward; and kept the Field that cold Night, being the first of March; but could not, by all his Orders diligently sent out, draw any confiderable Body of Horse to him by the end of the next day; they having Quarter'd themselves at pleafure over the Country, many above twenty Miles from Bedmin, and many running to the Enemy; and others purposely staying in their Quarters, till the Enemy came to disposses them.

WHEN by the disorders and distractions of the Army, which are before set down, his Highness was perswaded to make his own Residence in Cornwal, he came to Truro on the 12th day of February; where he received a Letter from the King, directed to those sour of the Council who had Signed that to his Majesty at Tavistock. This Letter was dated at Oxford the fifth of February, and contained these words;

"Yours from Tavistock hath fully satisfied me, why my "Commands concerning Prince Charles his going beyond Sea "were not obeyed. And I likewise agree with you in opinion, that he is not to go until there be an evident necessity;
also approving very much of the Steps whereby you mean to do it. But withal, I reiterate my Commands to you for the Prince's going over, whensoever there shall be a visible hazard of his falling into the Rebels hands. In the mean time, I like very well that he should be at the head of the Army; and so much the rather, for what I shall now impart to you of my resolution, &c. And so proceeded in the Communication of his own design of taking the Field; which was afterwards frustrated by the deseat of my Lord Aftley, and the ill success in the West.

THE Prince having staid some days at Trure, went to the Prince Pendennis; intending only to recreate himself for two or sees to Pendennis.

three days; and to quicken the Works, which were well advanced; his Highness having issued all the Money he could procure, towards the finishing of them. But, in the very Morning that he meant to return to Trure, his Army being then retired, and Fairfax at the edge of Cornwal, the Lord Hopton and the Lord Capel fent Advertisements, "that they "had feverally receiv'd Intelligence of a defign to feife the "Person of the Prince; and that many Persons of Quality of "the Country were privy to it. Hereupon the Prince thought it most convenient to stay where he was, and so return'd no more to Truro. The time of apparent danger was now in view, and if there were in truth any defign of feifing the Prince's Person, they had reason to believe that some of his own Servants were not strangers to it. The Lords Capel and Hopton being at the Army; only the Prince, the Lord colepepper, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, knew the King's Pleasure, and what was to be done. And they two had no confidence, that they should have Reputation enough to go through with it; the Earl of Benk-shire continuing very jealous of the delign of going into France, whatever they faid to the contrary: The Governour of the Castle was Old and Fearful, and not resolute enough to be trusted; and his Son, though a gallant Gentleman, and worthy of any Trust, had little Credit with his Father.

THERE was no Letter from the King (though they had long before defind fuch a one, and proposed the Form) fit to be publickly thew'd, in which there were not some Clauses which would have been applied to his Majesty's differvice; especially if he should have been at London, which was then confidently averr'd by fome, who fwore "they met him at "Uxbridge. Therefore these two Counsellors concluded," that "the Prince's going away must feem to be the effect of Coun-"fel upon necessity, and the appearance of danger to his Perfon, without any mention of the King's Command. But how to procure this Resolution from the Council was the difficulty. They very well knew the Lords minds who were ablent, but durft not own that knowledge, left the defign might be more suspected: In the end, having advised Baldwin Wake, to cause the Frigat belonging to Hasdunck, and the other Ships, to be ready upon an hours warning; they proposed in Council, when the Lords Berk-sbire, and Bremford were present, "to send Mr Fambaru to the Army, to receive the "opinion and advice of the Lords that were there, what was "best to be done with reference to the Person of the Prince, "and whether it were fit to hazard him in Pendennis; which was accordingly done. Their Lordships, according to the former agreement between them, return'd their advice, "that "it was not fit to adventure his Highness in that Castle "(which would not only not preferve his Person, but pro-"bably, by his stay there, might be lost; but by his absence "might defend it felf) and that he should remove to Fersey "or silly. This, upon Mr Fambaw's report, was unanimoully confented to by the whole Council.

But because fersey was so near to France, and so might give the greater umbrage, and that Silly was a part of Cornwal, and was by them all conceiv'd a place of unquestionable ftrength, the publick Resolution was for silly, it being in their power, when they were at Sea, to go for Jersey, if the Wind was fair for one, and cross to the other. So the Resolution being imparted to no more that Night, than was of absolute necellity (for we apprehended clamour from the Army, from the Country, and from that Garrison in whose Power the Prince was) the next Morning, being Monday, the fecond of March, after the News was come that the Army was retiring from Bodmin, and the Enemy marching furiously after, and thereby Men were sufficiently awaken'd with the apprehension of the Prince's Safety; the Governour and his Son were call'd into the Council, and made acquainted with the Prince's Resolution, "that Night to Embark himself for Silly, "being a part of cornwal; from whence, by fuch aids and "relief, as he hoped he thould procure from France and For-"reign parts, he fliould be best able to relieve them. And accordingly, that Night, about ten of the Clock, he put himself on Board; and on Wednesday in the Atternoon; arriv'd fafe in Silly; from whence, within two days, the Lord Thence by Colepepper was fent into France, to acquaint the Queen se with Sea to Silly. "his Highness's being at Silly; with the Wants and Incoma modities of that place; and to defire supply of Men and "Monies for the Defence thereof, and the Support of his "own Person; it being agreed in Council, before the Lord Colepepper's going from Silly, "that if, upon advancement of "the Parliament Fleet, or any other apparent danger, his "Highness thould have cause to suspect the security of his "Person there (the strength of the place in no degree anfwering expectation, or the fame of it is he would imme-"diately Embark himself in the same Erigat (which attended there) " and go to Ferfey."

WHEN the Lord Hopton found that he could put no restraint to the Licence of the Soldiers, he called a Council of War to confider what was to be done. The principal Officers of Horse were so far from considering any Means to put their Men in order, and heart to face the Enemy, that they declared in plain English, "that their Men would newer be brought to Fight; and therefore proposed positively,

" to fend for a Treaty: From which not one Officer differred, except only Major General Web, who always professed against it. The Lord Hopeon told them, "it was a thing he could "not consent to without express leave from the Prince (who "was then at Pendennis-Caltle) to whom he would imme-"diately dispatch away an Express; hoping, that, by that delay, he should be able to recover the Officers to a better Resolution; or that, by the advance of the Enemy, they would be compell'd to Fight. But they continued their importunity, and at last (no doubt by the advice of our own Men; for many, both Officers and Soldiers, went every day in to them) a Trumpet arriv'd from Sr Thomas Fairfax with a Letter to the Lord Hopton, offering a Treaty, and making some Propositions to the Officers and Soldiers. His Lordthip Communicated not this Letter to above one or two, of principal Truft; conceiving it not fit, in that disorder and dejectedness, to make it publick. Hereupon, all the principal Officers affemble together (except the Major General, Web) and expressing much discontent that they might not see the Letter, declare peremptorily to the Lord Hopton, "that "if he would not consent to it, they were resolv'd to Treat "themselves. And from this time they neither kept Guards, nor perform'd any Duty; Their Horse every day mingling with those of the Enemy, without any Act of Hostility. In this streight, the Lord Hopton having fent his Ammunition and Foot into Pendennis, and the Mount, and declar'd, "that "he would neither Treat for himself nor the Garrisons, he gave the Horse leave to Treat; and thereupon those Articles were concluded, by which that Body of Horse was dissolved; and Himself and the Lord capel, with the first Wind, went from the Mount to silly, to attend his Highness; who, as is faid, was gone thither from Pendennis-Castle, after the Enemies whole Army was enter'd Cornwal.

The Lord Hopton's Army diffolv'd.

Touching
Duke H2milton Prifiner at Pendennis.

HAVING left the Prince in Silly, so near the end of that unprosperous year 1645 (for it was upon the three and twentieth of March) that there will be no more occasion of mentioning him till the next year, and being now to leave Gorn-wal, it will be necessary to inform the Reader of one particular. It is at large set down, in a former Book, what proceedings had been at Oxford against Duke Hamilton; and how he had been sint sent Prisoner to Bristal, and from thence to Pendennis-Castle in Cornwal. And since we shall hereaster find him acting a great part for the King, and General in the Head of a great Army, it would be very incongruous, after having spent so much time in Cornwal without so much as naming him, to leave Men ignorant what became of him, and how he obtain'd his Liberty; which he employ'd afterwards wards with fo much Zeal for the King's Service to the loss of his Life; by which he was not only vindicated, in the opinion of many Honest Men, from all those Jealousies and Aspersions, he had long suffer'd under; but the proceeding that had been against him at Oxford, was looked upon by many as void of that Justice and Policy, which had been requilite; and they concluded by what he did after a long Imprisonment, how much he might have done more Successfully, if he had never been restrain'd. Without doubt, what he did afterwards, and what he Suffer'd, ought, in great mea-fure, to free his Memory from any Reproaches for the Errors, or Weakness, of which he had before been guilty. What were the Motives, and Inducements of his Commitment, have been at large fet down before in the proper place. It remains now, only to fet down how he came at last to be possessed of his Liberty, and why he obtain'd it no sooner, by other more gracious ways from the King; which might have been an obligation upon him; when it might easily have been foreseen, that he must be, in a short time, at Liberty, notwithstanding any opposition.

WHEN the Prince first visited Cornwal, to settle his own Revenue of that Dutchy; which was the only support he had, and out of which he provided for the carrying on the King's Service, upon many emergent occasions; he spent some days at Trure, to settle his duty upon the Tinn, by Virtue of his ancient Privilege of Preemption. And in that time, which was about the end of July, the Governour of Pendennis-Castle invited him to dine there; which his Highness willingly accepted, that he might take a full View of the Situation and Strength thereof; having it then in his view, that he might probably be compell'd to refort thither. Every Man knew well that Duke Hamilton was then a Prisoner there, and therefore it was to be consider'd, what the Prince was to do, if the Duke should defire, as without doubt he would, to kiss his hand, And it was resolv'd without dispute, "that the Prince was not to admit such a Person into his Presence, who stood so much in his Father's displeasure, "and was committed to Prison by him; and that none of "the Council, or of his Highness's Servants, should visit, or "enter into any kind of correspondence with him. Thereupon the Governour was advised, in regard the Accommodations in the Castle were very narrow, "that, during the "time the Prince was in the Castle, the Duke should be re-"moved out of his Chamber into one of the Soldier's Houses; which was done accordingly. This the Duke took very heavily, lamenting "that he might not be admitted to fee the "Prince; and had a defire to have conferr'd with the Lord

Colepepper, or the Chancellor, which they were not then at liberty to have fatisfied him in. He afterwards renew'd the same desire to them both, by his Servant Mr Hamilton. Hereupon, when the Chancellor was shortly after sent to visit the Ports of Padstow, the Mount, and Pendennis, which was about the middle of August (the business being, under that difguile, to provide for the Prince's Transportation, when it should be necessary) the Prince referr'd it to him "to see the "Duke, if he found it convenient. When he came to Pendennis, and was to stay there necessarily some days, he was inform'd, "that the Duke came always abroad to Meals, and "that at that time all Men spoke freely with him: So that, either he was to be made a close Prisoner by his being there, or they were to meet at Supper and Dinner. The Governour then asked him, "whether the Duke should come a-"broad. The Chancellor had neither Authority nor Reason to make any alteration; therefore he told him, "he knew "his own course, which he presumed he would observe who-"ever came; and that if the Duke pleased, he would wait "upon him in his Chamber, to kifs his hands before Supper; the which he did.

WHEN the Duke, after some Civilities to him whom he had long known, and some Reproaches to the Governour, who was present, "of his very strict usage and carriage towards "him; which, he faid he believ'd he could not justify (whereas the Chancellor well knew, that the Governour was absolutely govern'd by him) spoke to him of his own condition, and of "his Misfortune to fall into his Majesty's difst pleasure, without having given him any Offence. He told him, "that he had very much defired to speak with him, "that he might make a Propolition to him, which he thought "for the King's Service; and he defired, if it feem'd so to "Him, that he would find means to recommend it to his "Majesty, and to procure his acceptance of it. Then he told him, "that he was an absolute Stranger to the Affairs of both "Kingdoms, having no other Intelligence, than what he re-"ceiv'dfrom Gentlemen whom he met in the next Room at "Dinner; but he believ'd, by his Majesty's late loss at "Nafeby, that his condition in England was very much worse "than his Servants hoped it would have been; and therefore, "that it might concern him to transact his business in Scot-" land affoon as might be: that he knew not in what state "the Lord Mountroje was in that Kingdom, but he was per-" fwaded that he was not without opposition. He said, "he se was confident that if he himself had his liberty, he could "do the King confiderable Service, and either incline that "Nation powerfully to mediate a Peace in England, or po-"fitively

" fitively to declare for the King, and joyn with Mountrofe. He faid, "he knew, it was believ'd by many, that the Ani-"mosity was so great from him to Mountrose, who indeed "had done him very causeless injuries, that he would rather "meditate Revenge than concur with him in any Action; "but he faid, he too well understood his own danger, if the "King and Monarchy were destroyed in this Kingdom, to "think of Private Contention and matters of Revenge, when "the Publick was fo much at Stake. And he must acknow-"ledge, how unjust foever the Lord Mountrofe had been to "him, he had done the King great Service; and therefore protested with many Affeverations, "he should joyn with him in the King's behalf, as with a Brother; and if he could " not win his own Brother from the other Party, he would "be as much against Him. He said, he could not apprehend "that his Liberty could be any way prejudicial to the King " for he would be a Prisoner still upon his Parole; and would "engage his Honour, that if he found he could not be able "to do his Majesty that acceptable Service, which he defird "(of which he had not the least doubt) he would speedily "return, and render himself a Prisoner again in the place "where he then was. In this discourse he made very great professions, and expressions of his Devotion to the King's Service, of his Obligations to him, and of the great confidence he had, in this particular, of being useful to his Majesty.

AFTER he made some paule, in expectation of what the Chancellor would fay, the Chancellor told him, "he doubted "not but he was very able to ferve the King both in that and "in this Kingdom; there being very many in both who had " a principal dependence upon him: that he heard the King "was making some propositions to the Scotts Army in Eng-" land, and that it would be a great instance of his Affection "and Fidelity to the King, if by any Message from him to "his Friends, and Dependents in the Scotiff Army then before Hereford, or to his Friends in Scotland, his Brother being the head or prime Person of Power there that opposed " Mountrose, they should declare for the King, or appear wil-"ling to do him Service; and that he having free liberty to "fend, through the Parliament's Army, to London, or into "Scotland, he might affoon do the King this Service, as receive a Warrant for his enlargement; which, he prefumed, he knew could not be granted but by the King himfelf.

oely THE Duke replied, "that he expected that Answer, but "that it was not possible for him to do any thing by Message or Letter, or any way but by his Presence: First, that they, "in whom he had interest, would look upon any thing he should write, or any Message he should send, as the result

" of diffress and compulsion, not of his affection or judgement. "Besides, he said, he look'd upon himself as very odious to "that Nation, which was irreconciled to him for his zeal to "the King, and thought this a just judgement of God upon "him for not adhering to them. And, he faid, for his own "Brother, who he heard indeed had the greatest influence "upon their Counsels, he had no reason to be confident in "him, at that distance; for, besides the extreme injury he "had done him, in making an escape from Oxford, by which "both their innocencies were made to be suspected, and for "which he should never forgive him, he was the Heir of the "House and Family; and he believ'd, would be content that "himself should grow old and dye in Prison: whereas, if he "were at liberry, and amongst them, he was confident some "for love, and others for fear, would stick to him; and he " should easily make it appear to those who were fiercest against the King, that it concern'd their own interest to sup-" port the King in his just power. However, he concluded, that the worst that could come was his returning to Prison, which he would not fail to do. So the discourse ended for that Night.

THE next day the Duke enter'd again into the fame Argument, with much earnestness, that the Chancellor would interpose, upon that ground, for his liberty; who told him, "that he was so ill a Courtier, that he could not dissemble to "him: that he was not fatisfied with his Reasons, and could "not but believe, he had interest enough, at that distance, to "make some real demonstration of his Affection to the King, why the impression he might make upon his Dependents and "Allies: and therefore that he could not offer any advice to "the King, to the purpose he desired. He told him, "that "he had been present at the Council-Table when the King "Communicated that business, which concern'd him, to the "Board; and that he gave his opinion fully, and earnestly, "for his Commitment; being fatisfied, upon the Information "that was given concerning him, that his Affection to the "King was very questionable; and that it appear'd, that he "had been earnestly pressed by those Persons of Honour in "that Kingdom, upon whom his Majesty relied, to declare "himself; and that if he could have been induced so to do, "having promised the King that he would, and having Autho-"rity to that purpose from him, they might very easily have "fuppressed that Rebellion in the bud: but that his Lordship "and his Brother, were so far from opposing it, that the very "Proclamation which had iffued out there for the general In-"furrection (which Proclamation was perused at Council-"Table, when he was committed) was not only fet forth in "his Majesty's own Name, but Sealed with his Signet; which was then in the Custody of the Earl of Laurick his Brother, "he being Secretary of State in that Kingdom. That those "who were the principal Informers against him, and who "professed that they could do no Service, if he were at liber-ty, now since his restraint, being arm'd with no more Au-"thority than he had, at his last being there, when the King-"dom was in Peace, had, upon all disadvantages imagin-"able, when that Kingdom was totally loft to the King, re-" duced the greatest part of it again to his obedience; and there-"fore, whether it was his Lordship's Misfortune, or his Fault, "fince things prosper'd so well in his absence, he could not as "a Counsellor, advise the King, without the privity and "consent of the Lord Mountrose, or withour some such Testi-"mony of his Service, as he had before proposed, to give "him his Liberty: and that any ill success, which possibly e might have no relation to that Act, would yet be imputed or to that Counsel; and the Lord Mountrose have at least a "just, or probable excuse, for any thing that should happen "amis.

THE Duke thanked him for the freedom he had used towards him; and faid, "upon the Information which was "given against him, he must acknowledge the proceedings to "be very just; but he was confident, whenever he should " be admitted to a fair hearing, he should appear very inno-"cent from the Allegations which had been given. He faid, "he had never made the least promise to the King, which he "had not exactly perform'd; that he had not Authority or "Power to cross any thing that was done to the prejudice of "the King; and therefore to have made any fuch Attempt, "or Declaration, as some Lords had defired, in that conjun-" cture of time, had been to have destroyed themselves to no a purpose: and therefore, he made hast to the King with such "Propositions, and Overtures, that he was confident, if he "had been admitted to have spoken with his Majesty, at his "coming to Oxford, he should have given good satisfaction in them; and then intended immediately to have return'd " into Scotland, with such Authority and Countenance, as the "King could well have given him; and doubted not but to " have prevented any inconveniences from that Kingdom! but "that by his Imprisonment (which he could have prevented, "for he had notice upon his Journey, what was intended, and "trusted so much in his innocence, that he would not avoid "it) all those designs failed. For his Brother, he could say "nothing; but he believ'd him an honest Man; and for the "proceedings of the Lord Mountrofe, though he had receiv'd good affiltance from Ireland, which was a good Foundation, Vol. II. "he could not but fay, it had been little less than miraculous:
"However, he presumed the work was not so near done
"there, but that His Assistance might be very seasonable.
After this they spoke often together; but this was the substance and result of all; he insisting upon his present Liberty, and the other as pressing, that he would write to his Friends.
Yet the Chancellor promised him "to present, by the first "convenience, his Suit and Proposition to the King; which he shortly after did in a Letter to the Lord Digby.

U PON the first news of the loss of the Battle of Naseby, it was enough foreseen, that the Prince himself might be put to a retreat to Pendennis-Castle. Therefore they wish'd, "that it might be in the Prince's power, upon an emergent occa-"fion, to remove the Duke from that place. Which confideration the Lord colepepper presented to the King, at his being with him in Wales; and thereupon a Warrant was fent from the King, for the removal of the Duke to Silly; which was likewise foreseen that the Prince might repair to. As the Enemy drew nearer the West, many good Men were very follicitous, that the Duke should be remov'd from Pendennis, having a great jealouly of the interest he had in the Governour; of which there was so universal a suspicion, that many Letters were writ to the Council, "that if he were not "speedily disposed to some other place, they seared the Castle "would be betrayed; and Sr Richard Greenvil writ earnestly to the Prince about it, as did S. Harry Killigrew a Person of entire Affections to the King, and a true Friend of the Governour) very importunately. So that about the Month of November, the King's Warrant for his removal was feat to St Arthur Baffet Governour of the Mount; who went to Pendennis in the Morning, and took him with him to the Mount, in order to remove him to Silly, when the time should require it; the Duke expressing great trouble and discontent that he should be remov'd, and pretending, "that he could not ride "for the Stone (of which he complain'd so much, that he had petition'd the King for leave to go into France to be cut) and the Governour, and all that Family and Garrison, made shew of no less grief to part with him, he having begotten a great opinion in that People of his Integrity and Innocence. But when the Duke faw there was no Remedy, he mounted a Horse that was provided for him, and passed the Journey very

Duke Hamilton is remov'd to the Mount.

AFTER the loss of Dartmouth, some Persons of near trust about the Prince resumed the discourse again of enlarging the Duke, and believ'd that he would be able to do the King great Service in the business of Scotland; and this prevailed to far with one of the Lords of the Council, that upon the considerce confidence of Dr Prazier, the Prince's Physician, he made a Journey with the Dr to the Mount; and did think, that he had so much prevail'd with the Duke, that he had consented to fend a Servant speedily to the Scotish Army in England (who should likewise pass by the King, and carry any Letters to his Majesty from the Prince) to perswade them to comply with the King; and that he would likewise dispatch Charles Murray into Scotland, instructed to his Brother Lanwrick, and that Party, to oblige them to joyn with Mountrofe. But Dr Frazier confessed to those he trusted, that the Duke " rather confented to it to fatisfy that Lord's vehemence and "importunity, than that he had any great hope of fuccess by "it; infifting still, that nothing but his own Liberty would "do it: for which he gave a reason, that before had never been heard of, and was very contrary to what the Duke had faid to the Chancellor, which was, "that the State of Scotland was to fentible of the injury done to the Duke by his impriforment (which he had faid before that they were very glad of) "that they had made an Order, that there should never be "Treaty with the King, or agreeing with Mountrofe, till he was at Liberty, or brought to a legal Trial. And when Charles Marray went to him for his instructions, though he faid much for him to fay again to his Friends, and his Brother, towards their declaring for the King, he discouraged him much as to the Journey, representing to him "his own danee ger, and the strict Orders that were in Scotland against diwifive Motions; of which, he faid, he feared this would be a taken for one.

Thrs made the Council to have no mind to be engaged in any Treaty with him, and less in proposing or consenting to his Liberty; not only upon the former knowledge they had of his disposition and nature, but also that they believ'd, if he were not fincere, he would do much mischief; and the more for being in any degree trusted; if he were fincere, that he would be able to do more good for the King, by being redeem'd out of Prison by the Enemy, than by being re-leased by the King or Prince. And therefore, when the Prince remov'd in that hast and disorder from Pendennis to Silly, there was no possibility of removing him; so that, at the furrender of the Mount, which was, by his advice, much Upon the fooner than they had reason to do it, when they were able to Surrender of defend themselves for many Months, he was enlarged, and the Months he obtain'd remov'd himself to London by speedy Journeys on Horse-his Liberty. back; and did never after complain of the Stone; which he before protested "would kill him, if he were not cut witha in a year.

The King's

WE left the King in Oxford, free from the trouble and Transactions uneasiness of those perpetual and wandering Marches, in which at Oxford. he had been so many Months exercised; and quiet from all rude and insolent provocations. He was now amongst his true and faithful Counsellors and Servants, whose Affection and Loyalty had first engaged them in his Service, and made them flick to him to the end; and who, if they were not able to give him affiftance, to ftem that mighty Torrent that overbore both Him and Them, paid him still the Duty that was due to him, and gave him no vexation when they could not give him comfort. There were yet some Garrisons remaining in his Obedience, which were like, during the Winter Seafon, to be preferv'd from any attempt of the Enemy. But upon the Approach of Spring, if the King should be without an Army in the Field, the Fate of those few places was easie to be discern'd. And which way an Army could possibly be brought together, or where it should be rais'd, was not within the compass of the wifest Man's comprehension. 'However the more difficult it was, the more vigour was to be applied in the attempt. Worcester, as it was Neighbouring to Wales, had the greatest Outlet and Elbow-room; and the Parliament party that had gotten any Footing there, behaved themselves with that Insolence and Tyranny, that even they who had called them thither, were weary of them, and ready to enter into any combination to destroy them. Upon this prospect, and some invitation, the King sent the Lord Astley (whom he had before, at his being at Cardiff, constituted Governour of those Parts, in the place of the Lord Gerrard) to Worcester, with order "to proceed, as he should find him-" felf able, towards the gathering a Body of Horse together, "against the Spring, from those Garrisons which were left, "and from Wales: and what progress he made towards it will be foon known.

WHEN a full prospect, upon the most mature deliberation, was taken of all the hopes which might with any colour of reason be entertain'd; all that occurr'd, appear'd so hopeless and desperate, that it was thought fit to resort to an old expedient, that had been found as desperate as any; which was a new Overture for a Treaty of Peace: for which, they who advised it, had no other reason, but that they could not tell what else to do. Cromwell had left Fairfax in the West, and with a Party Selected had set down before Basing, takes Win- and his imperious Summons having been rejected, he Storm'd the Place and took it, and put most of the Garrison to the Sword: and a little before Winchester had Surrender'd upon easy conditions. The lesser Garrisons in the North, which had stood out till now, were render'd every day; and the Scotilb

Cromwell chefter and Basing.

Scotish Army, which had march'd as far as their own Borders. was called back, and required to Befiege Newark. So that whoever thought the fending to the Parliament (puffed up and fwoln with fo many Successes) for a Peace, would prove to no purpose, was not yet able to tell, what was like to prove to better purpose. This reflection alone prevail'd with the King, who had enough experimented those inclinations, to refer entirely to the Council, "to choose any expedient, "they thought most probable to succeed, and to prepare any "Message they would advise his Majesty to send to the Par-"liament. And when they had confider d it, the Overtures he had already made, by two feveral Messages, to which he had receiv'd no Answer, were so ample, that they knew not what addition to make to them; but concluded, "that this "Message should contain nothing but a resentment of That, "and a demand of an Answer to the Messages his Majesty

"had formerly sent for a Treaty of Peace.

THIS Message had the same entertainment which the for- The King mer had receiv'd. It was receiv'd, read, and then laid afide fends another without any Debate; which they who wish'd well to it, had Message for not credit or courage to advance; yet still found means to Peace, which convey their advice to Oxford, "that the King should not fide by the "give over that importunity : and they who had little hopes Houses. of better effects from it, were yet of opinion, "that the neg-"lecting those gracious invitations, made by his Majesty for "Peace, would shortly make the Parliament so odious, that "they would not dare long to continue in the same obsti-"nacy. The Scots were griev'd and enraged, to fee their Idol Presbytery fo undervalued, and flighted, that belides the Independents power in the City, their very Assembly of Divines every day lost Credit and Authority to support it; and defir'd nothing more than a Treaty for Peace: and many others who had contributed most to the suppression of the King's Power, were now much more afraid of their own Army, than ever they had been of His Authority; and believ'd, that if a Treaty were once fet on foot, it would not be in the power of the most violent to render it ineffectual: or whatever they believ'd themselves, they convey'd this to fome about the King, as the concurrent advice of all who pretended to wish well: And some Men took upon them to fend the subject of what Message the King should send, and cloath'd in fuch expressions, as they conceiv'd were like to gain ground; which his Majesty could not but graciously ac- Hu Majesty cept; though he very seldom imitated their Style.

" fend a Safe Conduct for the Duke of Richmond, and the "Earl of Southampton, Mr John Albburnham, and Mr Geoffrey "Palmer; by whom he would make such particular Propo-"fitions to them as he hoped would produce a Peace. this they return'd an Answer, such as it was, "that it would "be inconvenient, and might be of dangerous consequence, "to admit those Lords and Gentlemen to come into their "Quarters; but that they were preparing some Propositions, "which, when finish'd, should be sent to his Majesty in Bills, "to be Sign'd by him; which would be the only way to pro-"duce a Peace. The King understood well what such Bills would contain, and which when he had granted, he thould have nothing left to deny; and therefore liked not, that fuch conclusions thould be made without a Treaty. He refolv'd once more to try another way, which having been never yet try'd, he believ'd they could not deny; and if granted, what hazard soever his Person should be in, he should discover, whether he had so many Friends in the Parliament, and the City, as many Men would perfwade him to conclude; and whether the Scots had ever a thought of doing him Service. He fent to them, towards the end of December, "that fince "all other Overtures had prov'd ineffectual, He defir'd to fends to defire a Perfo-66 enter into a Personal Treaty with the two Houses of Parnal Treaty "liament at Westminster, and the Commissioners of the Parlia-"ment of Scotland, upon all matters which might conduce "to the Peace and Happinels of the distracted Kingdoms; "and to that purpose his Majesty would come to London, or "Westminster, with such of his Servants as now attended him, "and their followers, not exceeding in the whole the Num-"ber of three hundred Persons, if he might have the engage-"ment of the two Houses of Parliament, the Commissioners " of the Parliament of Scotland, of the Chief Commanders in "Sr Thomas Fairfax's Army, and of those of the Scotish Army, " for his Free and Safe coming to, and abode in London, or Westminster, for the space of forty days; and after that "time, for his Free and Safe repair to Oxford, Worcester, or Wewark if a Peace should not be concluded: For their bet-"ter encouragement to hope well from this Treaty, his Ma-"jesty offer'd to settle the Militia in such Persons as should " be acceptable to them.

Their Anfwer.

This Message indeed awaken'd them, and made them believe that the Gamesters who were to play this Game, look'd into their hands, and hoped to find a Party in their own Quarters; and that if they should neglect to send an Answer to this Message, their Silence might be taken for consent, and that they should quickly hear the King was in London; which they did not wish. They made thereupon more than ordinary ordinary hast, to let his Majesty know, "that there had been ano delay on their parts; but for the Personal Treaty de-"fired by his Majesty, after so much Innocent Blood shed in "the War by his Commands, and Commissions (with the mention of many other odious particulars) "they conceiv'd, "that until Satisfaction and Security were first given to both "Kingdoms, his Majesty's coming thither could not be con-"venient, nor by them affented to; nor did they apprehend "it a means conducing to Peace, to accept of a Treaty for, "few days, with any thoughts or intentions of returning to "Hostility again. They observed, "that his Majesty desired "the engagement, not only of the Parliament, but of the "Chief Commanders in Sr Thomas Fairfax's Army, and those "of the Scotish Army; which, they faid, was against the Pri-"vilege and Honour of Parliament, to have those joyn'd with "them, who were Subject and Subordinate to their Autho-"rity. They renew'd what they had faid in their last Anfwer, " that they would shortly send some Bills to his Majesty, "the figning of which would be the best way to procure a "good, and a fafe Peace.

Though the King was not willing to acquiesce with this The King stubborn rejection, but sent Message upon Message still to sends again, them for a better Answer, and at last offer'd "to distrantle "all his Garrisons, and so come to and reside with his Parsulament, if all they who had adhered to him, might be at "liberty to live in their own Houses, and to enjoy their own "Estates, without being obliged to take any Oaths, but "what were enjoyn'd by the Law; he could never procure any other Answer from them. And lest all this should not appear Affront enough, they published an Ordinance, as they Their Ordicall'd it, "that if the King should, contrary to the advice of nance there the Parliament already given to him, come, or attempt to upon."

"come, within the Lines of Communication, the Committee of the Militia should raise such Forces as they should think fit, to prevent any Tumult that might arise by his coming, and to suppress any that should happen; and to apprehend any who should come with him, or refort to him; and to fecure his Person from Danger: which was an expression

"fecure his Person from Danger: which was an expression they were not ashamed always to use, when there was no Danger that threaten'd him, but what themselves contriv'd, and design'd against him. To this their Ordinance, they added another Injunction, "that all who had ever borne "Armes for his Majesty (whereof very many upon the Surrender of Garrisons, and liberty granted to them, by their Articles upon those Surrenders, were come thither) "should immediately depart, and go out of London, upon penalty of being proceeded against as Spies. So that all doors being, in this obstinate manner, thut against a Treaty, all thoughts of That, at least with reference to the Parliament, were laid aside; and all endeavours used to get such a power together, as might make them fee that his Majesty was not out of all possibility of being yet able to defend himself.

WHEN all hopes, as I faid, were desperate of any Treaty The King tries to deal with the Parliament, and consequently many hazards were with the In- to be run, in the contriving a Peace any other way; the fudependents. Staining the War, with any probability of Success, was the next defirable thing to a Peace, and preferable before any fuch Peace, as was probably to be hoped for from the Party that govern'd the Army, which govern'd the Parliament. King therefore used all the means which occurr'd to him, or which were advised and proposed by others, to divide the Independent Party; and to prevail with some principal Persons of them, to find their Content and Satisfaction in advancing his Interest. That Party comprehended many who were not fo much Enemies to the State, or to the Church, as not to defire heartily that a Peace might be establish'd upon the foundations of Both, fo their own particular Ambitions might be comply'd with. To them the King thought he might be able to propose very valuable Compensations for any Service they could do Him; and the power of the Prefbyterians, as they were in conjunction with the Scots, feem'd no unnatural Argument to work upon those, who professed to be sway'd by matter of Liberty of Conscience in Religion: fince it was out of all question, that they should never find the least satisfaction to their Scruples, and their Principles in Church Government, from those who pretended to Erect the Kingdom of Fesus Christ. And it was thought to be no ill Presage towards the repairing of the Fabrick of the Church of England, that it's two Mortal Enemies, who had exposed it to so much Perfecution and Oppression, hated each other as mortally, and labour'd each others Destruction, with the same Fury and Zeal they had both practiced towards Her. This reasonable imagination very much disposed the King, who was well acquainted with the unruly Spirit and Malice of the Presbyterians, to think it possible that he might receive some benefit from the Independents; a Faction newly grown up; and with which he was utterly unacquainted: and his Majesty's extraordinary Affection for the Church made him the less weigh and consider the incompatibility, and irreconcilableness of that Faction with the Government of the State; of which, it may be, he was the less sensible, because he thought nothing more impossible, than that the English Nation should fubmit to any other than Monarchical Government. There were belides an over-active and bufy kind of Men, who still undertook undertook to make Overtures as agreeable to the wift of fome principal Leaders of that Party, and as with their Authority, and so prevail'd with the King, to suffer some Perfons of Credit near him, to make some Propositions, in his Name, to particular Persons. And it is very probable, that as the same Men, made the expectations of those People appear to the King much more reasonable and moderate, than in truth they were, so they perswaded the others to believe, that his Majesty would yield to many more important Concessions, than he would ever be induced to grant. So either But in vain. fide had, in a short time, a clear view into each others intentions, and quickly gave over any expectation of benefit that way; fave that the Independents were willing, that the King should cherish the hopes of their complyance, and the King as willing that they should believe that his Majesty might be prevail'd with to grant more, than at first he appeard refolv'd to do. Recoeffe

THE truth is, though that Party was most prevalent in the Parliament; and comprehended all the Superior Officers of the Army (the General only excepted; who thought himself a Presbyterian) yet there were only three Men, Vane, Cromwell, and Ireton, who govern'd and disposed all the rest according to their Sentiments; and without doubt they had not yet published their dark designs to many of their own Party, nor would their Party, at that time, have been so numerous and confiderable, if they had known, or but imagin'd, that they had entertain'd those thoughts of Heart, which they grew every day less tender to conceal, and forward enough to discover.

THERE was another Intrigue now fet on foot, with much A Treaty more probability of Success, both in respect of the thing it between the felf, and the circumstances with which it came accompanied; the Scots. and that was a Treaty with the Scots, by the Interpolition and fet on foot by Mediation of the Crown of France; which, to that purpose the Interpo at this time, fent an Envoy, one Montrevil, to London, with fition of some formal Address to the Parliament, but intentionally to And Mon-Negotiate between the King and the Scots; whose Agent at trevil is Paris had given encouragement to the Queen of England, then fent for that there, to hope that That Nation would return to their Duty; purpoje. and the Queen Regent, in the great generofity of her Heart, did really defire to contribute all that was in Her Power to the King's recovery. To that purpose, the sent Montrevil at this time with Credentials to the King, as well as to the Parliament; by which the Queen had opportunity to Communicate her Advice to the King her Husband; and the Envoy had Authority "to engage the Faith of France, for the perfor-"mance of whatfoever the King should promise to the Scots. THIS

This was the first instance, and it will appear a very forry one, that a Forreign Soveraign Prince gave, of withing a Reconciliation, or to put a period to the Civil War in his Majesty's Dominions; towards the contrivance whereof, and the frequent somenting it, too many of them contributed too much. The old Maxim, "that the Crown of England could "Ballance the Differences which sell out between the Princes of Europe, by it's inclining to either Party, had made the Ministers of our State too negligent in cultivating the Affections of their Neighbours by any real Obligations; as if they were to be Arbiters only in the Differences which sell out between others, without being themselves lyable to any impression of adverse Fortune. This made the unexpected Calamity that besel this Kingdom not ingrateful to it's Neighbours on all sides; who were willing to see it weaken'd and chaltifed by it's own strokes.

CARDINAL Richelien, out of the haughtines of his own nature, and immoderate appetite of revenge, under the dilguile of being jealous of the Honour of his Matter, had difcover'd an implacable hatred against the English, ever fince that unhappy provocation by the Invalion of the life of Rec, and the declared Protection of Rochel; and took the first opportunity, from the indisposition and murmurs of Scotland, to warm that People into Rebellion, and law the Poylon thereof prosper, and spread to his own with; which he tomented by the French Embassadour in the Parliament, with all the Venom of his Heart; as hath been mention'd before. As he had not unwifely driven the Queen Mother out of France, or rather kept her from returning, when she had unadvisedly withdrawn her felf from thence, so he was as vigilant to keep her Daughter, the Queen of England, from coming thither; which she resolv'd to have done, when she carried the Princes Royal into Holland; in hope to work upon the King her Brother, to make fuch a feafonable Declaration against the Rebels of England, and Scotland, as might terrify them from the farther profecution of their wicked purposes. But it was made known to her, "that her Presence would not be acceptable in France; and fo, for the present, that enterprise was declin'd.

But that great Cardinal being now dead, and the King himself dying within a short time after, the Administration of the Affairs of that Kingdom, in the Insancy of the King, and under his Mother, the Queen Regent, was committed to Cardinal Mazarin, an Italian by Birth, and raised by Richelieu to the degree of a Cardinal, for his great dexterity in putting Casal into the hands of Prants, when the Spaniard had given itup to him, as the Nuntio of the Pope, and in trust that it should should remain in the Possession of his Holiness, till the Title of the Duke of Mantus thould be determin'd. This Cardinal was a Man rather of different, than contrary Parts from his Predecessor; and fitter to build upon the Foundations which he had laid, than to have laid those Foundations; and to cultivate, by Artifice, Dexterity, and Diffimulation (in which his Nature and Parts excell'd) what the other had begun with great Resolution and Vigour, and even gone through with invincible Constancy and Courage. So that, the one having broken the heart of all oppolition and contradiction to the Crown, by the cutting off the Head of the Duke of Montmorancy, and reducing-Monfieur, the Brother of the King, to the most tame submission, and incapacity of fomenting another Rebellion, it was very easy for the other, to find a complyance from all Men, new sufficiently rerished from any contradiction. And how great things foever this last Minister perform'd for the Service of that Crown, during the Minority of the King, they may all, in justice, be imputed to the prudence and providence of Cardinal Ricbelien; who had reduced and disposed the whole Nation to an entire Subjection and

Submission to what should be imposed upon them.

CARDINAL Mazarin, when he came first to that great Ministry, was without any Personal Animosity against our King, or the English Nation; and was no otherwise delighted with the distraction and confusion they were both involved in, than as it disabled the whole People from making such a conjunction with the Spaniard, as might make the profecution of that War (upon which his whole Heart was let) the more difficult to him: which he had the more reason to apprehend by the Residence of Don Alonso de Cardenas, Embassadour from the King of Spain, still at London, making all Addresses to the Parliament. When the Queen had been compell'd in the last year, upon the advance of the Earl of Effex into the West, to Transport her self out of cornwal into France, the had found there as good a reception, as the could expect; and receiv'd as many expressions of kindness from the Queen Regent, and as ample promifes from the Cardinal, as the could with. So that the promifed her felf a very good effect from her Journey; and did procure from him fuch a present supply of Armes and Ammunition, as, though of no great value in it felf, the was willing to interpret, as a good evidence of the reality of his intentions. But the Cardinal did not yet think the King's Condition low enough; and rather defired, by administring little and ordinary Supplies, to enable him to continue the struggle, than to see him Victorious over his Enemies; when he might more remember, how slender Aid he had receiv'd, than That he had been affifted; and might hereafter make himself Arbiter of the Peace between the two Crowns. Wherefore he was more follicitous to keep a good correspondence with the Parliament, and to profess a Neutrality between the King and them, than inclined to give them any jealousy, by appearing much concern'd for the King.

But after the Battle of Najeby was loft, and that the King feem'd fo totally defeated, that he had very little hope of appearing again in the head of an Army, that might be able to refift the Enemy, the Cardinal was Awaken'd to new Apprehensions; and saw more cause to sear the Monstrous power of the Parliament, after they had totally subdued the King, than ever he had to apprehend the excels of greatness in the Crown: and therefore, belides the frequent incitements he receiv'd from the generolity of the Queen Regent, who really defir'd to supply some Substantial relief to the King, he was himself willing to receive any Propolitions from the Queen of England, by which She thought that the King her Husband's Service might be advanced; and had always the Dexterity and Artifice, by letting things fall in discourse, in the presence of those, who, he knew, would observe and report what they heard or conceived, to cause that to be proposed to him; which he had most mind to do, or to engage himself in. So he had Application enough from the Covenanting Party of Scotland (who from the beginning had depended upon France, by the encouragement and promises of Cardinal Richelieu) to know how to direct them, to apply themselves to the Queen of England, that they might come recommended by her Majesty to him, as a good Expedient for the King's Service. For they were not now referred in their Complaints of the Treatment they receiv'd from the Parliament, and of the terrible apprehension they had of being disappointed of all their hopes, by the prevalence of the Independent Army, and of their Faction in both Houses; and therefore wish'd nothing more; than a good opportunity to make a firm conjunction with the King; towards which they had all encouragement from the Cardinal, if they made their address to the Queen, and if her Majesty would defire the Cardinal to conduct it. And because many things must be promised, on the King's behalf, to the Scots upon this their engagement, "the Crown of France "fhould give credit and engage, as well that the Scots should perform all that they should promise, as that the King "hould make good whatfoever should be undertaken by Him; "or by the Queen on his behalf.

Montrevil's Negotiation with there in January, with as much credit as the Queen Regent could give him to the Scots, and as the Queen of England

could give him to the King; who likewise perswaded his Majesty, to believe, "that France was now become really kind " to him, and would engage all it's power to serve him; and "that the Cardinal was well affured, that the Scots would be-"have themselves henceforwards very honestly; which his Majesty was willing to believe, when all other hopes had failed; and all the Overtures made by him for a Treaty had been rejected. But it was not long before he was undeceiv'd; and discern'd that this Treaty was not like to produce better fruit, than his former Overtures had done. For the first Information he received from Montrevil, after his arrival in England, and after he had conferr'd with the Scotish Commisfioners, was, "that they peremptorily infifted upon his Ma-"jefty's Condescension, and Promise, for the Establishment of "the Presbyterian Government in England, as it was in Scot-"land; without which, he faid, there was no hope, that they "would ever joyn with his Majesty; and therefore the Envoy pressed his Majesty "to give them satisfaction therein, as the advice of the Queen Regent and the Cardinal, and likewife "of the Queen his Wife; which exceedingly troubled the King. And the Scots alledged confidently, "that the Queen "had expressly promis'd to Sr Robert Moray (a cunning and a dextrous Man, who had been employ'd by them to her Majesty) "that his Majesty should consent thereunto. They produced a Writing Sign'd by the Queen, and deliver'd to Sr Robert Moray, wherein there were such expressions concerning Religion, as nothing pleafed the King; and made him look upon that Negotiation, as rather a Conspiracy against the Church between the Roman Catholicks and Presbyterians, than as an Expedient for his Restoration, or Preservation: and he was very much displeased with some Persons, of near trust about the Queen, to whose misinformation, and advice, he imputed what her Majesty had done in that particular.

THEREUPON he deferr'd not to let Monsieur Montrevil know, "that the alteration of the Government in the Church "was expressly against his Conscience; and that he would "never consent to it; that what the Queen his Wife had "seem'd to promise, proceeded from her not being well in"form'd of the constitution of the Government of England;
"which could not consist with the change that was proposed. But his Majesty offer'd, "to give all the assurance imaginable, and hoped that the Queen Regent would engage her Royal word on his behalf in that particular, that the Maintenance and Support of the Episcopal Government in England, should not in any degree shake, or bring the least prejudice to that Government that was then settled in Scotland; and, farther he offer'd, "that, if the Scots would desire to have the free exercise of their Religion, according to their own pra"Ctice and custome, whilst they should be at any time in "England, he would assign them convenient places to that "purpose in London, or any other part of the Kingdom,

"where they should desire it. Nor could all the Importunity or Arguments, used by Montrevil, prevail with his Majesty to enlarge those Concessions, or in the least to recede from the constancy of his resolution; though he informed him of "the distantaction both the Storest Commissioners, and the "Presbyterians in London had in his Majesty's resolution, and "averseness from gratifying them in that, which they always had, and always would insist upon; and that the Scots were resolved to have no more to do with his Majesty; but to a"gree with the Independents; from whom they could have better conditions than from Flim; and he fear d such an Agreement was too far advanced already.

MANY Answers and Replies passed between the Kingand Montrevil in Cipher, and with all imaginable Secrecy; in which, whatever reproaches were tall upon him afterwards, he always gave the King very clear and impartial information of the temper, and of the discourfes of those People with whom he was to Transact. And though he did, upon all occasions, with much earmeltness, advise his Majesty to consent to the unreasonable demands of the Scots, which, he did believe, he would be at last compell'd to do, yet it is as certain, that he did use all the Arguments the Talent of his Understanding, which was a very good one, could fuggest to him, to perswade the star to be contented with what the King had fo frankly offer'd and granted to them; and did all he could to perfwade and convince them, that their own prefervation, and that of their Nation depended upon the prefervation of the King, and the Support of his Regal Authority. And it is very memorable, that, in Answer to a Letter which Montrevel writ to the King, and in which he perswaded his Majesty to agree with the Scots upon their own demands, and amongst other Arguments, affured his Majesty, "that the English Presbyterians were fully agreed with the Scors (which his Majesty believ'd they would never be) the Store having declared, that they would never infift upon the fettling any other Goevernment than was at that time practiced in London; urging many other fuccesses, which they had at that time obtain'd; the King, after some expressions of his adhering to what he had formerly declared, used these words in his Letter of the 21th of January to Monlieur Montrevil, "Let them never flatter themselves so with their good successes; without pretending to Prophecy, I will foretel their ruin; except they "agree with me; however it shall please God to dispose of "Me;

"Me; which they had great reason to remember after. Bur because, though this Treaty was begun, and proceeded so far as is recited, before the end of the present Year, yet it was carried on, and did not conclude, till some Months after the next Year was begun, we shall put an end to our Relation of it at present, and resume what remains, in it's place of the Year ensuing: Only, before we finish our Account of the Actions of this unfortunate Year forty five, we must mention one more, which happen'd on the two and twentieth of March, just as the Year was expiring.

THE King had hoped to draw out of the few Garrisons The Year still in his possession, such a Body of Horse and Foot, as might 1645 one enable Him to take the Field early in the Spring, though with-the Defeat out any fixed defign. But this was dash'd in the very beginning, of the Lord . by the total Rout and Defeat the Lord Aftley underwent; who Aftley's being upon his March from Worcester towards Oxford, with Forges. two thousand Horse and Foot, and the King having appointed to meet him, with another Body of fifteen hundred Horse and Foot, Letters and Orders miscarried, and were intercepted; whereby the Enemy came to have notice of the Refolution, and drew a much greater strength from their several Garrisons of Glocester, Warwick, Coventry, and Evesbam. So that the Lord Aftley was no sooner upon his March, but they follow'd him; and the second day, after he had marched all night, when he thought he had escaped all their Quarters, they fell upon his wearied Troops; which, though a bold and frout Relistance was made, were at last totally Deseated; and the Lord Aftley himself, Sr Charles Lucas, who was Lieutenant General of the Horse, and most of the other Officers, who were not kill'd, were taken Prisoners. The few who escaped, were so scatter'd and dispersed, that they never came together again; nor did there remain, from that time, any possibility for the King to draw any other Troops together in the Field.
